INTRODUCTION

A prosopography is, literally, a listing of people. As such it has become a sub-section of historical studies. But certain requirements are necessary if it is to be of any use. The prime necessity is that it should be as complete as possible. Omissions are misleading. That is to say, every single individual who can be identified as fitting within the parameters of the list must be included in that list.

This is a tedious requirement, involving much research to find the names of people who will never be more than names. It is much easier, as in such works as the various dictionaries of 'national biography', to pick out those who are 'important', and to ignore the rest. But importance is both a subjective term and a moving category, as the revisers of the British Dictionary of National Biography—now given the prefix 'New'—have discovered. A dictionary of national biography is one thing this it is not, since the vast majority of the British people are omitted. The advent of the computer has, ironically, now made it physically possible to produce a list of all the British who have ever lived, though it would be an enormous task. But it is not being attempted—yet.

For the ancient world the problem is at least manageable, and can be made even easier by taking one particular area for treatment—as, for instance, the Aitolians. There have been, over the years, a substantial number of similar listings, though it is not clear that any of them are intended to be complete. (A convenient list of these lists is in J. M. Fossey's useful, The Study of Ancient Greek Prosopography, Chicago 1991.) The ongoing Lexicon of Greek Personal Names, Oxford 1987–, overlaps with this concept, but does not contain all the information which a prosopography needs to.

I began this listing as part of the work for The League of the Aitolians, wishing to discover the careers of eminent men of the league, and in the hope of discovering their origins and any patterns in their various lives. (It was originally intended to be included in that work as an appendix, but grew.) It gradually became clear that this really did involve searching out all possible Aitolians—hence my rationalising first and second paragraphs. Having reached that conclusion it became necessary also to do more than merely produce a list. Hence the 'Studies' which form Part I of this work. The studies are those which have occurred to me as being worth doing. Others may find different subjects. If so, I hope the raw material which is in Part II, the 'Prosopography', will be of use.

An Appeal. I am certain that there are mistakes here. It is also obvious that more information about those listed, and new names, will be discovered, particularly in newly found or published inscriptions. May I appeal to students, therefore, to tell me of mistakes, and to point out any omissions and any new material? It is by such means that one may hope to produce corrections and find new entries.

PART ONE

STUDIES

1. AITOLIAN FAMILIES

One of the products of a prosopography is the opportunity it gives to reconstruct families. In the nature of things, these families are from the wealthiest group in the society, and so this section is in part the argument on which I have based the conclusion in The League of the Aitolians, that the league was effectively an oligarchy.

It must be admitted at the outset that a good deal of conjecture is involved in the reconstructions which follow, and I have not been too restrained in this, though I hope to have indicated it where it is used. The pattern is to explain the connections between people which have been detected, and to finish in almost every case with a suggested genealogical diagram. The whole is organised according to the home-city or town of the family (only one reconstruction is unlocated).

Certain basic practices underlie these conjectures. First, in the prosopography instances of men with the same name from the same domicile and active within the same generation (taken to be about thirty years) have been taken to be references to one man, unless there is evidence to the contrary; second, the common practices of Greek nomenclature, whereby names recur in the same family, will be assumed to apply, though this is by no means as common as one would wish; a generation will be taken as approximately thirty years—so that named fathers will be assumed to be active thirty years earlier than their sons (again as in the prosopography). No account can be taken of movement between cities (except possibly in one case—see 'Arakynos').

The families are identified by city or domicile, and are listed alphabetically by city. Only those families which can be traced through three generations or having at least four members in two generations, are included. Attested affiliations and apparentations are shown by continuous lines, conjectural relationships are shown by broken lines, though it has to be said that some 'certainties' have an element of conjecture about them; the dates quoted are those when the people named were active according to the records, or those calculated for parents.

Bearing all this in mind, however, the results are worth considering. About one tenth of the entries in the prosopography can be organised into these families (341 names out of about 3300), and 74 families can be recognised. Some families are notable in leaving records of their existence and of their activities but only at a local level—as at Bouttos; every Amphissan family is in this category, for instance.

Between them the families in this reconstruction held the office of league strategos 75 times; since the records only reveal the names of 134 strategoi, this argues a remarkable concentration of power into these families—though it is modified by the findings in the 'Origins' section, that the 'catchment-area' from which these officials were drawn widened for much of the league's history. Other officials also appear with some frequency in these families, who show by their activity as sponsors of proxenoi that they were active in trade and in diplomacy. Nearly forty of them attended as hieromnemones at Delphi also.

1. Agrinion

Hybistas (2), son of Boularchos, was Aitolian strategos in 165/164 and agonothetes at Naupaktos: another Hybistas (1), whose domicile is not recorded, was a Delphic hieromnemon in 217/216, and is to be identified with the son of Agemachos (2), who was engyon in the same year; the fathers thus flourished c.195 (Boularchos) and c.245 (Agemachos). The unusual name of the Hybistai, and the acceptable generational chronology, all suggest the following genealogy:

Agemachos (c.245)
Hybistas (1) (217/216)
Boularchos (c.195)
Hybistas (2) (165/164)

2. Amphissa

The large number of manumissions—and hence the large number of names—which are recorded at Delphi from Amphissans provides material for several family lists. However, these manumissions are concentrated in about half a century after 200, so three generations is about the limit for any family.

A. Archytas (1), son of Lamenos was engyon in 214/213 with his son Xenophanes (4), and Lamenos may be dated c.245 as well. Another Xenophanes (2) also from Amphissa, was an Olympic victor in 252, when he can be assumed to have been in his young manhood, and so perhaps the brother of Lamenos; yet another, and earlier, Xenophanes (1), was engyon for Rhodes in 271/270, and could thus be the father of these two. Names and places suggest strongly that these men were all one family. The conjectural genealogy is thus:

Xenophanes (1) (271/270)

(252) Xenophanes (2) | Lamenos (c.245)

Archytas (1) (214/213)

Xenophanes (4) (214/213)

B. Two men named Damophanes (1) and (2), one the father of Philokrates (2), the other the son of Gennaios (1), may indicate a relationship. The senior generation, Damophanes (1) and Gennaios, were roughly contemporary; Philokrates and the younger Damophanes (2) likewise. There is a second Gennaios (2), a decade and a half younger. I suggest the family tree may be as follows:

(c.230) Damophanes (1) | Gennaios (1) (c.225)

(200/199) Philokrates (2) | Damophanes (2) (196–195)

Gennaios (2) (182–173)

C. Three generations of a family are recorded in a group of manumissions:

Dion (5) (c.230–220)

Euarchos (4) (200–199)

Sokrates (3) (197–188) | Dion (8) (189) | Euarchos (7) (174/173)

It is of interest that the three men of the third generation appear to have been born and named in the order as shown from left to right, as the recorded dates of their activity suggest. Perhaps there was another Sokrates in the family, but no such man can be discovered in the sources available.

D. Damainetos (2) is recorded as the father of Pausanias (3), Kallenika, and Autokles, and Pausanias was the father of Ortholaos. The father is to be dated before 210, the children between 200 and 181. There is another Damainetos (3), active between 191 and 182, who is likely to be a relative, perhaps a cousin of the children. The timing is somewhat compressed, but if we assume that Damainetos (2) was born well before his caculated dates, and that Ortholaos was the son of his eldest son, it can be accepted, producing the following:

Damainetos (2) c.225–210 ?

Pausanias (3) (200–195) | Kallenika (194) | Autokles (181) | Damainetos (3) (191–182)

Ortholaos (200–192)

E. Soxenos the son of Kleon (3) is also the father of Theodoros (6). The distance in time between Kleon and Theodoros is only 35 years, but it may be assumed that Soxenos was elderly before appearing in the record, in a manumission:

Kleon (3) (c.220)

Soxenos (192–191)

Theodoros (6) (186)

F. Two men were honoured with statues, Eudikos (2) at Physkeis about 200, and he himself had honoured his father Damainetos (1) at Delphi. Damainetos was also son of an earlier Eudikos (1), and the younger Eudikos had a brother Oxymachos. So the family tree is:

Eudikos (7) (c.260)

Damainetos (1) (c.230)

Eudikos (2) (c.200) | Oxymachos (c.200)

The dates are, unfortunately, all dependent on the dating of the younger Eudikos' statue, which itself is indefinite, but the reconstruction itself is not dependent on the dates.

3. Apollonia

Three generations of a family from the unlocated town of Apollonia—father, daughter, and grandson—are noted in a single inscription. The daughter's husband is not named, but the grandson is named for her father:

Timolaos (1) (c.255)
Timaretas (c.225)
Timolaos (2) (c.225)

4. Arakynos/Proscheion

Astydos was active in 271, and so his father Tauriskos (1) can be dated c.300. Another Tauriskos (2) was engyon in 245, and his father, Alexon (1), is thus to be dated c.275, and was therefore a contemporary of Astydos. This might suggest the following:

Tauriskos (1) (c.300)
- - - - - - | ________
Alexon (1) (c.275) Astydos (271)
Tauriskos (2) (245)

But Astydos was from 'Arakynos' and Tauriskos (2) from Proscheion, and this may be thought to invalidate the suggested genealogy. Arakynos, however is presumably a settlement (not a city) in the Arakynthos mountains, at the foot of which Proscheion lay; the period 270–240 was one of active urbanization in Aitolia, and this may be evidence of a wealthy rural family moving from its home village to the nearest city. One strong item in favour of this identification is the unusual name Tauriskos, and the generational chronology fits. This must be seen as a tentative reconstruction only, however.

5. Arsinoe

A. Satyros (9), son of Andronikos (9), was Aitolian strategos three times between 143/142 and 129/128. Menelaos (2) was also son of Andronikos and hipparchos with his (presumed) brother in the first of these strategies. Andronikos could be the man executed in 167 (Andronikos (10)) for opposing Rome, though his home-city is not recorded, and he was the son of another Andronikos (7). The taint of execution and opposition to Rome would no doubt retard the sons' careers, and they may have been only children by 167. Even so, the time-span is clearly reasonable. This would give three generations:

Andronikos (7) (c.200)

Andronikos (9) and (10) (died 167)

Satyros (9) (143–128) — Menelaos (2) (143)

B. Straton II (6), son of Nikoboulos (6), was strategos in 166/165 and 159/158, and Nikoboulos thus flourished c.195; he may be identified with the son of Polemon (3) who was noted in 184/183, so providing a line of three generations. It is difficult to believe that Straton I (1), strategos in 213/212, and named on a statue at Lamia, is of a different family; I postulate him to be a brother of Polemon; both were from Arsinoe, and are attested at the same time. A Straton is also noted as father of an agonothetes Dorimachos from Arsinoe, who is undated; he would be the son of either Straton I or II. There is thus a good deal in this genealogy which is tentative:

Polemon (3) (c.215) — Straton I (1) (213/212)

Nikoboulos (6) (195–183) — ? Dorimachos (9) (n.d.)

Straton II (6) (166–158)

? Dorimachos (9) (n.d.)

C. Three men are all named as sons of Dikaiarchos (12) from Arsinoe on the same inscription; they were no doubt brothers; unfortunately the inscription is undated:

Dikaiarchos (12)

Agathokles (6) — Damokritos (10) — Lysandros (4)

6. Boukation

Two men called Euarchos ((9) and (10)) are recorded on the same inscription from Phistyon, and came from the same place, Boukation; their fathers, Nikiadas (6) and Antagros, were thus contemporaries, c.195. The following is the genealogy:

Nikiadas (6) (c.195) — Antagros (c.195)

Euarchos (9) (163/162) — Euarchos (10) (163/162)

7. Bouttos

A. Leontomenes (9), active in 141–136, is recorded as the son of Lamios (14), who was thus active about 170; a Lykios (2), and an Hellanikos (5), both active in 137/136, are also noted as sons of Lamios; Lamios thus had three sons. Another Hellanikos (2) had a son Xenainas (2), who was active in the mid-second century, and the father was thus an approximate contemporary of Lamios. Hellanikos is a rare name, and two in one town suggest a relationship; the dating implies that Lamios and Hellanikos were brothers. There is also another Leontomenes (8) of Bouttos, active in the 190s and recorded as the father of Lamios. I would thus suggest the following:

Leontomenes (8) (195–192)

Lamios (14) (c.170–c.165) — Hellanikos (2) (early C2)

Leontomenes (9) (141–136) — Lykios (2) (137/136) — Hellanikos (5) (137/136) — Xenainas (2) (mid C2)

B. In all Aitolia the names Lampis and Gastron only appear at Bouttos in the first half of the second century, for Gastron (1) son of Lampis (2), and Lampis (2) son of Gastron (1). The younger men are contemporaries, and so their fathers were also: the obvious genealogy is:

(c.180) Lampis (1) — Gastron (1) (c.180)

(148–136) Gastron (2) — Lampis (2) (153–136)

C. A series of connections involving the names Hagemon and Euxenidas suggest an extended family. Euxenidas (3), active in 143, and Stratos, active in 135, were both sons of Hagemon (4), who was thus active c.170. Hagemon (6), active in mid-century, Lamios (25), active 141–137, and Thrason (3), active in the 140s, were all sons of Euxenidas (2), who was thus active—again—about 170. The interconnection of names and the coincidence of dates would make the elder Hagemon (4) and Euxenidas (2) brothers. In addition there is a Lykiskos (11) active between 148 and 135, who was a son of Thrason (2), active therefore about 170, who could be another brother; he may be the Thrason (1) who was dispossessed of land at Delphi in 191, but the dating suggests that it is better to see him as the father of them all. I suggest the following tree:

8. Dolopia

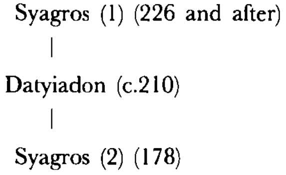
Syagros (2) son of Datyiadon was hipparchos and hieromnemon in 178; an earlier Syagros had been strategos in 226/225, and a Delphic hieromnemon at some later date, though his origin is not stated; however, the names are distinctive and with the date-spread they suggest:



Note, however, that Syagros (2) may no longer have been an Aitolian, Dolopia having been lost or divided in 189; but it seems clear that the locally important families continued to be dominant.

9. Eidaios

Three men only are recorded as coming from the unlocated Eidaios. Lykiskos (2) was prominent enough to act as a witness in a state document in 214/213; Lykiskos (12) is named in a manumission in 143/142. The obvious assumption is that these two men with the same name from the same small place were related. The third man is Lykon (9), also named in a manumission in 153/152. (Both manumissions took place at the temple of Syrian Aphrodite at Phistyon, which may mean that Eidaios was near there.) The repetition of the initial element 'Lyk-' strongly suggests a single family. The time distance between them suggests also a missing generation, so the genealogy may be:

Lykiskos (2) (214/213)
(153/152) Lykon (9) — Lykiskos (12) (143/142)

10. Erinna

Two men of Erinna, Nikanor (2) and Nikaios (1), are named in manumissions of 169 and 167 respectively. They are both named as sons of Nikon (8) (though the father of Nikaios is spelled 'Neikon'). Clearly a family, therefore. In addition, from the same place there are Nikoboulos (4), father of Pherenikos (2), who is recorded in three manumissions between 174 and 167 (the father was, therefore, mature by c.200). The repetition of the 'Niko-' element in all the names provokes the idea that Nikoboulos was Nikon's brother, so the genealogy might be:

(c.200) Nikon (8) - - - Nikoboulos (4) (c.200)

Nikon (8) → Nikanor (2) (169); Nikaios (1) (167)

Nikoboulos (4) → Pherenikos (2) (174–167)

11. Eupalion

Two men, Eurydamos (3) and Timolochos (3), are recorded as sons of Erymnion, both of them active in the mid-second century, and both from Eupalion. They can only be brothers.

Another Aitolian, who may be connected with them, is recorded. He is Erymnon, who acted as governor of Syracuse for Agathokles in 306, and so a mercenary soldier of some distinction and ability. No doubt he was an ancestor, perhaps the family member who made the family fortunes. This would suggest the following:

Erymnon (306)

(Two generations?)

Erymnion (early C2)

(mid C2) Eurydamos (3) — Timolochos (3) (mid C2)

12. Herakleia

Damoxenos (1) son of Paidias (2) was grammateus of the league in 239/238 and engyon at the same time; he is, no doubt, the hieromnemon of that name of c.250; thus his father may be dated to c.280–270. Paidias (3), also from Herakleia, was hieromnemon in 246/245, during the period of Damoxenos (1)'s activity, and may be presumed to have been Damoxenos' younger brother. Another member of the family may be Theodoros (2) of Herakleia, hipparchos in 223/222, the son of Damoxenos. Damoxenos (3), son of Theodoros (1), was a member of the arbitration panel at Melitene in the 220s—and so the father was active in the 250s. An earlier Paidias (1), son of Stratippos (2), was the subject of a statue by Lysippos, and so was active in the last third of the fourth century. The identity of names and domiciles implies a single family, possibly with one generation after Paidias (1) missing, though this is not wholly required. I must confess to rather a lot of assumptions in this case:

Stratippos (2) (C4)

Paidias (1) (C4)

Paidias (2) (c.280–270)

Damoxenos (1) (250–238)	Paidias (3) (246/245)	Theodoros (1) (c.250)
Theodoros (2) (223/222)		Damoxenos (3) (220s)

13. Homiliadas

Pankles, son of Korymbios, is recorded in Soteria inscriptions in the 250s, as from Homiliadas in Oitia. He is also recorded as the father of Lamprias (1), who was an envoy on behalf of the Dorian city of Kytenion to Xanthos in Lykia in 206 and is recorded later in 190. The connection of the two references is Herakles: the envoy's task was to gain help for rebuilding Kytenion's walls by appealing to Xanthos' sense of kinship since both cities were said to have been founded by the hero; and Mount Oita, high above both Homiliadas and Kytenion, was the site of the funeral pyre of Herakles. The family tree is thus as follows:

Korymbios (c.280)
Pankles (250s)
Lamprias (1) (206–190)

14. Hypata

Two sons of Agias (3) of Hypata, Polemarchos (21) and Dikaiarchos (7), were both proxenoi in 169–167: the father may thus be dated c.200. Given these names, it may not be too far-fetched to see Eupolemos (5), commander at Kynoskephalai and Ambrakia, 197 and 189, and strategos in 189/188 and 176/175, as their relative. He was denounced as anti-Roman in 172, and is noted as a member of Proxenos' party in 170; these instances are surely all the same person, and they carry his active career through to the time of the active careers of Polemarchos and Dikaiarchos; it is most comfortable to see Eupolemos as their uncle, however, and so as the younger brother of Agias. The genealogy would therefore be:

(c.200) Agias (3) — Eupolemos (5) (197–170)
Polemarchos (21) (169–167) — Dikaiarchos (7) (169–167)

15. Istorios

Three men, Aristeas (6), Epilaos, and Nikandros (10) are recorded as sons of Xennias (4), and all four are witnesses to a manumission at Naupaktos in 137/136; clearly a family:

Xennias (4) (c.165)

Aristeas (6) | Epilaos | Nikandros (10) (all 137/136)

16. Kallia/Kallipolis

A. Hagetas (1), son of Lochagos (1), was strategos in 218/217 and 201/200; he was father of a second Lochagos (4), who was strategos in 179/178, hieromnemon at Delphi in 178, and taken as a prisoner to Rome in 171; this gives:

Lochagos (1) (c.250)

Hagetas (1) (218–200)

Lochagos (4) (179–171)

B. A three-generation family is recorded on a single manumission from Delphi of 151–149: the archon of Kallipolis was Ladikos (5), whose son Aristophylos (2) was a witness. Ladikos' father Pleistainos (4) is known from other inscriptions as well. The family is thus:

Pleistainos (4) (194–165)

Ladikos (5) (151–149)

Aristophylos (2) (151–149)

C. Ladikos (1), hieromnemon in 205/204 was the son of Dropinas (1), who thus flourished about 235. A second Dropinas (2) witnessed a manumission at Delphi in 200/199. His parentage is not recorded, but all three came from the same city. In addition another Ladikos (or Ladikas) (3), son of Dropinas was honoured with a statue at Delphi, which is dated vaguely to the second century. I suggest he was the son of the younger Dropinas, producing the following genealogy:

Dropinas (1) (c.235)

(205/204) Ladikos (1) | Dropinas (2) (200/199)

Ladikas (3) (C2)

The name Ladikos common to B and C under this city might suggest that these two groups formed single family, but there is no evidence to connect them: the idea is certainly tempting, though.

17. Kalydon

For a relatively small city, Kalydon has produced a considerable number of families able to be reconstructed; it is due, of course, to the combination of active participation in league politics and to the survival of manumission inscriptions, both of which were very productive of records.

A. Alexandros I (12), active for a quarter of a century between 210 and 185/184, was son of Nikias (4), who thus can he dated c.240, and was the father of Nikias (13). The elder Nikias may be the Delphic hieromnemon of that name (but no domicile) in 254; the son was probably the hieromnemon in 178 (certainly a Kalydonian). The younger Nikias in turn was father of Alexandros II (23), strategos in 154/153. The genealogy is thus:

Nikias (4) (254–240)
Alexandros I (12) (210–184)
Nikias (13) (178)
Alexandros II (23) (154)

B. Nikias (19), son of Ladames (4), was strategos about the end of the second century, and his own son, also Ladames (5), put up a statue to Sulla at Delphi in 84; earlier there is another Nikias (5) with a son Ladames (2). The son was active in the 190s, and so the father was mature about 225. The coincidences of name suggest a single family:

Nikias (5) (c.225)
Ladames (2) (198–192)
Ladames (4) (mid C2)
Nikias (19) (end C2)
Ladames (5) (84)

The descent between Ladames (2) and (4) is not attested, and the timing is rather long, perhaps up to five decades, for an immediate father and son descent. Another generation is probably required, with, surely, the name Nikias; he is not, however, attested.

C. Lykopos I (1) was strategos four times and held other offices for a career lasting from 271 to 236. Lykopos II (7), son of Polemarchos (25) was strategos in the mid-second century. Polemarchos cannot be otherwise identified, but there is another Lykopos (5) who is recorded as a league envoy to Rome in 189. (He may also be the man who witnessed a manumission at Kalydon in the 190s, Lykopos (3).) The name is sufficiently unusual to allow the assumption that all three were of one family. In addition, yet another Lykopos (6), son of Hageson (6), is recorded in 129/128; Hageson was thus active c.160 and could have been the brother of Polemarchos (25). There is evidently a generation missing, however, which we may tentatively fill with an earlier Polemarchos, of whom there are many in the third century, as follows:

Lykopos I (1) (271–236)
(?) [Polemarchos] (c.220)
Lykopos (3 and 5) (190s and 189)
Polemarchos (25) (c.160) — Hageson (6) (c.160)
Lykopos II (7) (late C2) — Lykopos (6) (129/128)

D. Two men called Arkison (I and II) were strategoi, I (1) in 264/263, and II (3) in 150/149; II is a Kalydonian; the name is distinctive enough to suggest a relationship between them, but exactly what it was is too speculative to venture: the chronology suggests a separation by at least two generations, if not more.

E. Three men, Andron (5), Philoxenos (9), and Lysixenos, are noted as contemporaries in 129, and as sons of Nikoboulos (9). A Nikoboulos is recorded between 142 and 128 as a son of T[. . .]on, and may be recognised as the father of the three, producing the genealogy:

T[. . .]on (c. 170)
Nikoboulos (9) (142–128)
Andron (5) — Philoxenos (9) — Lysixenos
(all 129/128)

F. Two men called Aleximachos ((2) and (5)) had fathers called Strombichos ((2) and (5)), and both were from Kalydon; we may assume that they were of the same family. The dating appears to fit well enough to provide the following family descent:

Strombichos (2) (c.225)
Aleximachos (2) (198–192)
Strombichos (5) (c.170)
Aleximachos (5) (142/141)

18. Lamia

Three brothers honoured at Delphi in the 250s provide the following family:

Xenodokos (1) c.285
Amyntor | Xenares | Pyrros (1) (all 257/256)

19. Lysimacheia

The notable Aitolian statesman Charixenos II (2), active for thirty years (261–234), was the son of Kydrion (3) who can thus be dated c.290–270; a Kydrion (3) of Lysimacheia held various offices between 275 and 269, an acceptable dating for him to be the father. Beyond that there was another Kydrion (1) honoured with his unnamed son at Athens before 307, and said to be a 'boularchos' of the Aitolian koinon; the dating would fit for the son to be the grandfather of the great Charixenos, giving the following genealogy:

Kydrion (1) (pre-307)
[. . .] (pre-307)
Kydrion (2 and 3) (290–269)
Charixenos II (2) (261–234)

It must be emphasised, though, that only Kydrion (3) is specifically noted as being from Lysimacheia.

20. Naupaktos

The combination of many men assuming public offices for the league, and the practice of manumission, as well as the size of the city, ensures that there are more reconstructable families from Naupaktos than any other individual Aitolian place; since this was the largest city of the league this is altogether fitting.

A. Physkon (2) son of Machatas (2) had a career in the period 257–228 including the offices of strategos, proxenos, and hieromnemon. His father was thus active about 280, and was engyon for Ambrakia in 271/270. Both were from Naupaktos. Machatas (3), a notable Aitolian envoy to Sparta in 220, does not have his home-city recorded, but his dating does suggest that he was a third generation of this family.

In addition, an earlier Physkon (1) was father of Neoptolemos (1), a very active Aitolian politician recorded in various offices between 274 and 239. He was thus the contemporary of both Machatas (2) and his son. I postulate that Physkon (1) was the father of both Machatas (2) and Neoptolemos, so producing the following:

Physkon (1) (c.300)

Neoptolemos (1) (274–239) — Machatas (2) (271)

Physkon (2) (257–228)

Machatas (3) (220)

B. Agelaos I (2) was strategos in 231/230, 224/223, and 217/216, and is identified as a political ally of Dorimachos and Skopas by Polybios; Agelaos II (8), son of Kleonikos (3), was strategos in 170/169; a Kleonikos (1) was proxenos of Achaia, who was captured in an Achaian sea raid in 218; he is presumably also the envoy of the league to Sparta with Chleinias in 210. Kleonikos (1) and Agelaos I were thus overlapping contemporaries; assuming the two Agelaoi were related, Agelaos I was presumably Kleonikos' brother, though from the dating they may also be father and son. This renders Agelaos' great speech for peace at Naupaktos in 217 all the more pointed in that Kleonikos had only just escaped being sold into slavery as a prisoner of war. There is also an earlier Agelaos (1) in the 260s and 250s; the name is sufficiently unusual to justify taking him as a progenitor.

Two more men, each recorded as archon of Naupaktos in the mid-second century, are Agelaos (9) and Kleonikos (6), and the names and sources imply that they were members of the same family.

The lack of precise connections precludes a reconstruction of the family genealogy, but the men can be arranged in successive generations, as follows:

1. Agelaos (1) (265–248)
2. Agelaos I (2) (231–216)	Kleonikos (1) (218–210)
3. Kleonikos (3) (c.200)
4. Agelaos II (8) (170/169)
5. Agelaos (9) (mid C2)	Kleonikos (6) (mid C2)

C. Two men called Lykos (8) and (19), had fathers named Pyrros (2) and (5), but one Lykos was active half a century before the other; the four can thus be satisfactorily arranged in succession. In another case, Lykos (15) had sons Pyrros (6) and Lykos (27). Assuming the repeated names indicate a family, and noting that Pyrros (5) and Lykos (15) calculate out as contemporaries, the family may be tentatively tabulated as follows:

- Pyrros (2) (c.220)
  - Lykos (8) (200–192)
    - (c.175) Pyrros (5)
      - Lykos (19) (148/147)
    - Lykos (15) (c.175) (dashed line)
      - Pyrros (6) (146/145)
      - Lykos (27) (137/136)

D. Three families of two or three generations each have a group of similar names:

1. Aristonymos (4), was son of Aristodamos (2), and had a son, Ariston (26).
2. Aristodamos (7) had two sons, Aristonymos (5) and Biaios (4); the father was a contemporary of Aristonymos (4); the sons contemporaries of Ariston (26).
3. Ariston (20), perhaps contemporary with Aristonymos (4) and Aristodamos (7), or perhaps later, had three sons, Aristonymos (6), Eudikos (6, and Biaios (3), and the last had a daughter, Lanassa; dating is vague for all of these, however.

Between them these people held a whole series of local offices in Naupaktos: grammateus three times, witnesses in eleven manumissions, they were twice honoured at Delphi, and one was a witness in an international agreement, Delphic proxenos, and the lady was the city's orphanophylax. I propose two connections to produce a single descent: first, that Aristodamos (7) be the younger brother of Aristonymos (4) and so the second son of Aristodamos (2); second, that Ariston (26) the son of Aristonymos (4) is the same man as the Ariston (20) who was the father of the three sons. This would produce the following tree:

Aristodamos (2) (c.220)

Aristonymos (4) (c.200–180) — Aristodamos (7) (185–170)

Ariston (26) and (20) (155–140) — Aristonymos (5) (158/157) — Biaios (4) (150/149)

Aristonymos (6) — Eudikos (6) — Biaios (3) (all mid C2)

Lanassa (mid C2)

E. Two men called Amynandros suggest a family connection. Hagetas (2), son of Amynandros (4) was the contemporary of Amynandros (6), son of Teisandros (2), so the fathers were also contemporaries. Amynandros (6) is recorded as active until 141/140, the same time as Hagetas, who is dated 150/149. Amynandros was also the father of Krino, whose date is only vaguely second century, so he may be either Amynandros (4) or (5). The whole would seem to make Amynandros (4) and Teisandros (2) brothers:

Amynandros (4) (c.180) — Teisandros (2) (c.175)

(150/149) Hagetas (2) Krino (152) — Amynandros (6) (148–140)

F. The only occurrences of the name Antidoros are in two contemporaries at Naupaktos. They may be assumed to be cousins, therefore, and their fathers brothers:

(c.180) Kriton (2) — So[. . .] (early C2)

(150/149) Antidoros (1) — Antidoros (2) (mid C2)

G. The daughter of Delphion was Kallisto, and Delphion's own father was Sotion (9)—a set of names which might have suggested a relationship even without apparentation being explicit.

Sotion (9) (c.170)
Delphion (141/140)
Kallisto (141/140)

H. Lykiskos (10), son of Lakon, may well himself be the father of Lykos (29). The dates are vague, but all three are from Naupaktos:

Lakon (c.180)
Lykiskos (10) (c.150)
Lykos (29) (mid C2)

I. Pythodoros (1), son of Megistotimos (1), had a son, Eumaios (4). The second Megistotimos (2) was, no doubt, his elder son, named for his grandfather:

Megistotimos (1) (c.215)
Pythodoros (1) (187/186)
(mid C2) Megistotimos (2) — Eumaios (4) (mid C2)

Two of these names recur in another group: Eumaios (3) was son of Lykos (14), and Pythodoros (2) was son of Hermion, all second century. Another Eumaios of Naupaktos (2) was father of Nikoleon (3).

These men may be ranged in generations, with the second early in the second century, and the third about mid-century. The whole, is, of course, based on the repetition of the names and on the generally equivalent datings. It may be that Megistotimos (1) was the progenitor of all.

1. Megistotimos (1) (c.215)
2. Pythodoros		Lykos	Hermion	Eumaios (early C2)
3. Megistotimos	Eumaios	Eumaios	Pythodoros	Nikoleon (mid C2)

J. Damonikos (3) was an official in Naupaktos, and his father, Damomenos, and his son Sosipatros (2), are both known in other contexts. The occurrence of the name Sosipatros draws attention to the only other person of that name, also from Naupaktos, a man who was the son of Lattabos (2);

Sosipatros (1)'s son is also known: Leon (16). Lattabos in turn is an unusual name, the only other instance being the father of Strombichos (1), and these two are also from Naupaktos. The dating separation is not really sufficient to place all five in a sequence; instead it may be that Strombichos (1), Damomenos, and Lattabos (2) can best be seen as brothers. Damonikos (3) and Sosipatros (1) would therefore be first cousins, and a suggested genealogy would be as follows:

Lattabos (1) (c.265)
  |____________________________
  |              |              |
Strombichos (1)  Damomenos      Lattabos (2)
(237/236)        (c.220)        (215)
                 |              |
(193/192) Damonikos (3)         Sosipatros (1) (184)
                 |              |
(150/149) Sosipatros (2)        Leon (16) (155–134)

K. Aristokrates (3) was active about 150, and his father Parmenidas (1) was thus adult c.180. Another Parmenidas (2) was active in the 130s, and may be thought most likely to be the son of Aristokrates (3). An earlier Aristokrates (1) was named in a manumission in 201/200 and was thus a mature adult at the time. I suggest these four were a family with repeating names:

Aristokrates (1) (201/200)
Parmenidas (1) (c.180)
Aristokrates (3) (c.150)
Parmenidas (2) (138–135)

L. Nikias (10), archon at Naupaktos, and witness in three manumissions in the 190s, was the son of Nikoleon (1) (who was thus active c.220); another Nikoleon (5) was grammateus at Naupaktos in the mid-second century, and was the son of a Nikias (15), whose dating, to the early part of the century, may mean he was the same man as (10). I suggest the following:

Nikoleon (1) (c.220)
Nikias (10 and 15) (200–190)
Nikoleon (5) (mid C2)

The frequency of the use of the name Nikias forbids still more speculation.

21. Oiantheia

Krinias (3) and his son Aristomachos (7) are noted as dispossessed land-owners at Delphi in 191, and Krinias was later a Delphian proxenos, showing admirable persistance and forgivneess. An earlier Krinias (1), also the son of an Aristomachos (2), and from the same place, was a theodorokos in 250/249 along with his son. Aristomachos (2) was thus perhaps fairly elderly by that date. There can surely be little doubt that these were all of one family, coming as they did from a small town, but it would be best to postulate a missing generation between the two Kriniai, who were separated by six decades. The obvious speculation is that his name was Aristomachos, but no such man is attested. The line is thus:

Aristomachos (2) (250/249)
Krinias (1) (250/249)
Krinias (3) (191)
Aristomachos (7) (191–175)

22. Phaistinos

The names of three men from this town (spelled Phaistinos and Phoistinos) suggest a relationship. Timotheos (2), honoured at Delphi in 247/246, was son of Xenodokos (2), who thus lived c.275. Timokrates (2) was hieromnemon in 205/204; there is also a 'Timotheos Aitolos' (3) who was hieromnemon ten years earlier. Very speculatively this may be the tree of the family;

Xenodokos (2) (c.275)
Timotheos (3) (247/246)
Timotheos (3) (217) — Timokrates (2) (205/204)

The 'Timo-' stem of three of the names, plus their origin, is the strongest indication of relationship, but this is certainly one of the more circumstantial of these reconstructions.

23. Phalika

In 143 Antiphanes (3) son of Timon (6) freed his slave Aphrodisia (1) and her two children. The name of one of the children was also Antiphanes

(4), and one must assume that they were the children of the elder Antiphanes. This provides the following genealogy:

Timon (6) (c.175)
(143) Antiphanes (3) = Aphrodisia (1) (143)
(143) Antiphanes (2) A[. . .]enos (143)

24. Phistyon

A. Hageson (3), active in 190/189, was the son of Phalakrion (1), and a Hageson (9) was the father of Skorpion (7), who are both undated, but all from Phistyon. By equating Hageson (3) and (9) the following genealogy emerges:

Phalakrion (1) (c.220)
Hageson (3 and 9) (190/189)
Skorpion (7) (n.d.)

B. Echelaos (2) son of Timaios (4) is recorded in four inscriptions in the 160s. The father would seem to be the Timaios who was archon at Phistyon twice, in 190/189 and 164/163, on the latter occasion when his son was a witness to the same manumission. Another Echelaos (1) of Phistyon is known, witnessing a manumission somewhat earlier than Timaios was archon. The otherwise unknown name suggests the following line therefore:

Echelaos (1) (c.204–190)
Timaios (4) (190–164)
Echelaos (2) (164–160)

25. Pholas

Pleistainos (2) son of Rhysiadas was honoured at Delphi in 268/267, and the father was thus dated c.295; Laarchos (1) son of Pleistainos (1) was engyon in 271/270; only Laarchos is said to be from Pholas, but the parentage can be assumed, and the father can be dated c.300. Pleistainos (1) was also father of Eurydamos (2), who was honoured at Olympia for a victory—apparently to be distinguished from the commander of that name against the Kelts.

Pleistainos (1) and Rhysiadas were thus contemporaries, and the name of the latter's son suggests that they were also brothers. The genealogy, therefore, would be:

Pleistainos (1) (c.300) — Rhysiadas (c.295)

Pleistainos (1) (c.300)
- Eurydamos (2) (n.d.)
- Laarchos (1) (271/270)

Rhysiadas (c.295)
- Pleistainos (2) (268/267)

26. Phyllaion

Two women, both called Andro ((1) and (2)) are named in the same manumission inscription. They are described as daughters of Aristomachos (9) and Oikiadas (3), respectively, and from the same town. The possibility of a relationship between the two pairs is obvious; perhaps the fathers were brothers:

(early C2) Aristomachos (9) — Oikiadas (3) (early C2)

(early C2) Aristomachos (9)
- (mid C2) Andro (1)

Oikiadas (3) (early C2)
- Andro (2) (mid C2)

27. Physkeis

A. Nikagoras (2) son of Stratagos (4) was engyon in 196/195; Stratagos (8) son of Porthanos (1) was adult by 186 according to a manumission; Porthanos (2) son of Stratagos (7) is, on the other hand, not recorded until 170; the least uncomfortable arrangement is to make Nikagoras (2), Porthanos (1) and Stratagos (7) brothers:

Stratagos (4) (c.225)
- Porthanos (1) (c.200)
  - Stratagos (8) (186–170)
- Stratagos (7) (c.200)
  - Porthanos (2) (170)
- Nikagoras (2) (196)

B. Damoteles (1) son of Telesarchos (1) was an active Aitolian politician between 229 and 189; the father was thus active c.250; Telesarchos (5) son of Damoteles (1) was engyon in the mid-second century, and thus in all probability the son of the envoy. Dates and names suggest the following tree:

Telesarchos (1) (c.250)
Damoteles (1) (229–189)
Telesarchos (5) (mid C2)

C. Eunikos (2), active c.225 as a Soteria official, was the son of Euandros. He had three sons of his own, all noted in a manumission of 194: Eunikos (4) (named for the father), Archidamos (9), and Nikodoros (a suitable name for a man involved with the Soteria games). An even earlier Eunikos, active at Delphi as a Soteria official and as hieromnemon more than once between 268 and 253 but whose home-city is not recorded, may well be a member of the same family, and I would suggest he was the father of Euandros, thus:

Eunikos (1) 268–253
Euandros (c.255)
Eunikos (2) (c.225)
(194–192) Eunikos (4) | Nikodoros (194) | Archidamos (9) (194)

28. Phytaion

Melankomas (1), son of Philodamos (5), is recorded as serving Ptolemy VIII in Cyprus, with his son, also Melankomas (2), and so between 145 and 116; Philodamos would thus be dated about 175. A Philodamos was strategos of the league at an undetermined date in the mid-second century. He is recorded as the son of Panaitolos, who in turn was a mercenary commander for Ptolemy IV who deserted to Antiochos III in 217, and who later became strategos of the league in the disastrous year of 167; he is recorded in a manumission as the son of Ariston (22). The connections imply a single family descended from Ariston, with Panaitolos making his fortune as a soldier and returning so full of prestige that he was a safe choice for league strategos in the aftermath of the great massacre.

29. Pleuron

A. Pantaleon I (1) son of Petalos (1) was strategos five times between 242/241 and 214/213; Pantaleon II (5) son of Archedamos (2) was strategos thrice between 194/193 and 180/179; Phylax (1) son of Pantaleon (6) was engyon in 207/206; Archidamos (2) son of Pantaleon (1) was a commander in the attack on Aigeira in 219 and was probably the Archedamos who was hipparchos during the third century and father of Pantaleon II. All came from the same place, Pleuron.

Putting all this disparate information together, I would suggest the following genealogy:

Petalos (1) (c.270)
Pantaleon I (1 and 6) (240–213)

Phylax (1) (207/206) — Archidamos (2) (died 219)
Pantaleon II (5) (186–172)

B. Simos (2), son of Simos (3), was a public figure in the 220s, and the first war against Philip V. He is also recorded as the father of Nikarchos (1), who may have been hipparchos in 194/193. The family was thus close to power for two generations:

Simos (2) (c.250)
Simos (3) (228–217)
Nikarchos (1) (194/193)

30. Polis

Drakon (2) of Polis was proxenos sponsor in 271/270. One of the few other men known from the small town of Polis was also called Drakon (3), proxenos sponsor on a decree of c.210–200, whose son's name suvives only as [. . .]tas in yet another inscription. Assuming a missing second generation, these names and identical origins suggest:

Drakon (3) (c.210–200)
[. . .]tas (187/186)

31. Poteidania

A. Neoptolemos (5), son of Euarchos (7), and Euarchos (13), son of Neoptolemos (3), both active in 180, irresistably imply that the elders were brothers:

(c.180) Euarchos (7)	Neoptolemos (3) (c.180)
(c.150) Neoptolemos (5)	Euarchos (13) (c.150)

B. Manumission inscriptions provide the names of a family of two generations:

Euboulidas (4) (c.180)

Timarchos (4)	Ariston (27)	Phillakos (2) (all c.150)

32. Proscheion

A. For a suggested genealogy of Tauriskos (2) son of Alexon (1) see under Arakynos (no. 4 above).

B. Agemacha freed a slave in the 190s. On the inscription her father is named as Andromenes (2). (No husband is recorded.) Her son, also Andromenes (4), is recorded half a century later:

Andromenes (2) (c.225)
Agemacha (198–192)
Andromenes (4) (142/141)

33. Sosthenes

Phaineas (5), a Delphic hieromnemon in 178, and Polemarchos (20), strategos in 169/168 or 167/166, were both sons of Nikias (8), who can thus be dated c.210–200. An earlier pair, Nikeas (2) son of Phaineas (1), also from Sosthenes, may be seen as the two preceding generations. The whole may be set out as follows:

Phaineas (1) (c.280)
Nikeas (2) (250/249)
Nikias (8) (c.210–200)
Phaineas (5) (178) — Polemarchos (20) (168)

34. Stratos

A. Agelochos (4) son of Trichas (3) was strategos in 169/168 or 168/167; Trichas (4) son of Agelochos (3) was strategos in 161/160 and 153/152. The dating would make them cousins, and so their fathers would be brothers, active in the 190s.

There are three other men of the same names, but without recorded domiciles: Agelochos (1) and Trichas (2), who were both hieromnemones in 241/240, and another Agelochos (2) who was hieromnemon in 205/204. The first two may be taken to be brothers, the third the son of one of them; their dates fit with the more certain group noted above, and the whole suggests the following:

(241/240) Agelochos (1) — Trichas (2) (241/240)
Trichas (2) (241/240)
Agelochos (2) (205/204)
(c.200) Trichas (3) — Agelochos (3) (c.190)
(c.200) Trichas (3)
(169/167) Agelochos (4)
Agelochos (3) (c.190)
Trichas (4) (161–153)

B. A manumission inscription from Stratos provides a family of three generations, though the dating is only to the second century:

Soteles (2)
Sokrates (8)
Soteles (3)

35. Teithronion

Niko freed a slave at Delphi in 194. Her father Echedamos (1) and her sons Menedamos (3) and Eupados are named on the inscription (but not, so it seems, her husband):

Echedamos (1) (c.225)
Niko (194)
Menedemos (3) (194) | Eupados (194)

36. Trichonos

A. Skopas II (3), son of Sosandros (3), strategos three times between 220/219 and 205/204, is said by Polybios to be related to Ariston and to Dorimachos. These men will be Ariston (5), son of Aristolaos (1), whose career stretched from 244 to 220, and Dorimachos I (3), son of Nikostratos (4), strategos four times between 219/218 and 202/201. Of the three fathers, Aristolaos can thus be dated to c.275, and Sosandros and Nikostratos to c.250. Another Dorimachos (4) was engyon in 205/204 and, as the son of Sosandros (3), will have been Skopas' brother; a Nikandros (7), son of Dorimachos, also engyon in 204/203, is perhaps best seen as the son of Dorimachos I (3). Skopas I (1), strategos in 272/271 and the Dorimachos (2) who was hieromnemon in 273 and witnessed the Akarnanian treaty, might be brothers. In the next generation are Kydrion (5) son of Dorimachos (3), noted in 184/183; he was the brother of Nikandros (7), who was noted also in the previous year, 185/184. One more Dorimachos (II (5)) was active in the 140s. He was son of Alexon (14), who was thus active c.175, a late contemporary of Kydrion and Nikandros. He was also father of another Nikandros (9) and of Alexandros (25), active in 141/140.

The central part of this family is thus clear enough, but the precise relationships of the earlier and later members to that central section and in some cases to each other are unclear. It is best to display the family as a sequence of generations, without conjecturing any relationships; only attested affiliations are therefore depicted:

I.	Skopas I (1) (288–270)	Dorimachos (2) (279–270)		Aristolaos (1) (c.275)
II.	Nikostratos (4) (c.250)		Sosandros (3) (c.250)	Ariston (5) (244–220)
III.	Dorimachos I (3) (219–201)		Skopas II (3) (224–204)	Dorimachos (4) (207/206)
IV.	Kydrion (5) (184/183)	Nikandros (7) (204–184)		Alexon (14) (c.175)
V.	Dorimachos II (5) (147–139)	Nikandros (9) (141/140)		Alexandros (25) (141/140)

This is the most extensive Aitolian family which can be detected, between them they held the office of strategos eleven times.

B. Thoas and Dikaiarchos (4) were brothers, the sons of Alexandros (5), who was thus active c.230. The father may also be the Alexandros (9) of Trichonos who commanded at Thermos in 218 against Philip V. Thoas also had a son called Alexandros (27) to whom a statue was erected at Thermos. The family tree is thus:

Alexandros (5 and 9) (c.230–219)

(205–173) Thoas — Dikaiarchos (4) (203–172)

(n.d.) Alexandros (27)

C. Charixenos (4) son of Proxenos (2) was agonothetes at the Soteria in 221/220, and the father was thus active c.250; another Proxenos (5) was active in the 180s and until he was murdered by his wife Othoboule in 176; an earlier Charixenos I (1) was strategos three times between 288/287 and 270/269. The chronology is acceptable for the following speculative connections:

Charixenos I (1) (288–269)
Proxenos (2) (c.250)
Charixenos (4) (221/220)
(176) Orthoboule = Proxenos (5) (183–176)

D. Nikandros (6) son of Bittos (3) was active between 194 and 177/176, and is probably the Nikandros sent to Rome as a prisoner in 167. His father is otherwise unknown. Bittos is a name which also occurs as the father of Andronikos (3), active in 214—and so the father is c.245 (Bittos (2)). An earlier Nikandros (2) had been engyon in 271/0, and, although the time-distance is a little long, he may be this Bittos' own father. The combination of the name Bittos (unique in Aitolia) and the word-play of the two names Nikandros and Andronikos leads me to suggest the following genealogy:

Nikandros (2) (271/270)
Bittos (2) (c.245)
Bittos (3) (c.225) — Andronikos (3) (214)
Nikandros (6) (194–167)

E. Xennias (2) was agonothetes at Delphi in 217/216, and son of Hellanikos (1), who is otherwise unknown, but can be dated to c.245. The only other Xennias (1), whose origin is unstated, was hieromnemon in 266/265. The generation intervals and the identity of names, suggests this:

Xennias (1) (266/265)
Hellanikos (1) (c.245)
Xennias (2) (217/216)

37. Unlocated

A family of three brothers, with their father, was honoured by the league in 257/6:

Charidemos (1)

Charidemos (2) | Anaxandros (1) | Polystratos (1)

2. WOMEN AND SLAVES

It is for practical convenience, not ideology, that these two elements are here grouped together. Because of the source material, there is a very large overlap between our knowledge of women and of slaves in Aitolia. That source material is very largely in the inscriptions recording manumissions. Of the 192 Aitolian women known by name, 102 were slaves; of the rest 26 are known from their grave stelai, and only nine others are known by name from sources which are not manumissions. Further every single slave known by name is only known because of their manumission; none are recorded as acting as slaves in any other source. It is thus very difficult to disentangle these women and slaves, and to treat them as separate groups would necessitate considerable repetition.

Manumissions

From about 200 BC it became the practice in Greece to record the manumissions of slaves in inscriptions at temples, as part of the process whereby slaves were freed by the device of transferring their ownership to the god, who then freed them. Earlier methods of recording these manumissions included proclaiming the deed at the theatre, a somewhat disruptive method, not altogether popular with either audiences or players. In the Aitolian area there is evidence of this process at Oiniadai, where the names of owners and slaves are carved into some of the seats.[1] The process moved to the temples from about 200 and the large number of inscriptions of the freeing which survive mean that it is well known and relatively straightforward.[2] The information contained in these inscriptions has been used often enough, for it provides clear data on the financial arrangements for freeing the slaves and so of slave values, and on slave origins, amongst other things. Here, by concentrating on those manumissions concerning Aitolians, some local points of information may be discovered.

The great majority of the inscriptions have been found at the temple at Delphi, not surprisingly, but considerable numbers also survive from the temples at Naupaktos and Bouttos, from the temple of Syrian Aphrodite at Phistyon and from that of Artemis Laphria at Kalydon. There are also occasional examples at various other places. 'Survival', of course, really means discovery and publication; there will be many more still buried, either still in the ground or hidden in museum storerooms. For the present, however, over 230 of these inscriptions concerning Aitolians are known, 138 of them from Delphi, 71 from Naupaktos and Bouttos, 18 from Phistyon, and the rest in ones and twos from Thermos, Arsinoe, Kalydon, Physkeis, Stratos, and Phaistinos.

[2] For a recent discussion of the Delphian evidence see D. Mulliez, 'Les Actes d'affanchissement delphiques', Cahiers Glotz III, 1992, 31–44; Y. Garlan, Slavery in Ancient Greece, trans J. Lloyd, Ithaca, N.Y., 1988, 73–84, R. J. Roscoe in K. Hopkins, Conquerors and Slaves, Cambridge 1978, 133–171. All these, of course, treat of the whole records of manumissions; I am concerned here with the limited group involved with Aitolians.

The origins of the people who participated in the manumission process is, in all the cases except those from the great temple at Delphi, and to a degree also at Phistyon, overwhelmingly local, though at Delphi the catchment area is wider, encompassing, in effect, all Greece. There is also some overlap, with Naupaktians going to Delphi, and a Thermian going to Phistyon. The choice of the temple was thus clearly a voluntary act, and not necessarily a function of citizenship; and it follows that a slave freed outside the owner's home city was accepted as free there as well. It is nevertheless a fact that only Delphi could bring people from a considerable distance; it seems that normally the temple of choice would be that which was the closest. Kalydon, for example has only Kalydonians; Naupaktos, either at the Sarapeion at Naupaktos or the Asklepaion at Bouttos, attracted people from the city and from Bouttos overwhelmingly. But Phistyon is different.

It is perhaps worth noting that there is only one of these inscriptions found at Thermos, despite considerable excavation there, and despite good publication of the epigraphic product. The fact that one Thermian actually recorded the manumission of his slave at Phistyon may indicate that the federal sanctuary at Thermos was not very friendly towards the idea of manumissions, or, more likely, it was a matter of choice. The temple at Phistyon, being one of Syrian Aphrodite (that is, Atargatis) was new, since this version of Aphrodite did not penetrate the Greek world until well after Alexander's conquests. It may have been that the priesthood publicised their services in the matter of manumissions; it may be that Aphrodite was seen as a particularly suitable recipient of a slave for the purpose of granting freedom. It is noticeable that, even though more male than female slaves are known of, the manumissions at Phistyon are overwhelmingly of women—ten compared with four men.

The proportion is reversed at Naupaktos—29 men freed compared with sixteen women—whereas at the Delphi temple the numbers (of Aitolians only) are not wholly at variance: seventy women and 55 men. Apollo at Delphi was no doubt seen as the greater sanctuary, and it attracted manumissions from a wide area, particularly from the smaller settlements without major shrines of their own, but also very obviously from the neighbouring city of Amphissa. Indeed manumissions at Delphi are recorded for no less than thirty different places in Aitolia, by contrast with only one at Naupaktos; Phistyon, again by contrast with Naupaktos and the other Aitolian sanctuaries, shows manumissions from at least eight different places apart from Phistyon, with only sixteen manumissions. Despite this the Sarapeion at Naupaktos manumitted predominantly men, and Aphrodite at Phistyon predominantly women. This is surely a sign of choice by either the owner, or, just conceivably, the slave.

Women

A majority of Aitolian women whose names are known are recorded on manumission inscriptions, either as manumitted slaves (102 individuals), or as owners performing the freeing—or very occasionally as other participants in the process (61 individuals); the next largest group are the dead: 26. Most women are therefore from the extremes of the social scale: either (former) slaves, or slave owners: the poor, even the poorest of women, and the wealthy, women rich enough to be able to surrender some of their control over their property.[3] The missing women were thus overwhelmingly from the middle ranks of the society.

The women are identified in many cases as daughters and as inhabitants of a place; exactly in the same way as men. Only very rarely on the inscriptions are they identified as wives. It follows that they were acting as their own agents in the acts of enfranchisement, though it may also be—the inscriptions do not show this—that they had to get their husband's (or, perhaps more likely, their father's) previous permission to sell off part of their property. But it was clearly not a legal requirement, or that would have had to be recorded, for the manumission inscriptions are precisely legal documents. And there are a number of women who freed slaves who are only identified by their names and homes, without further identification as daughters or wives; they were clearly acting alone, and independently. They were independent, therefore, as the owners of property. One woman, Lanassa, is also identified as holding a public office, as orphanophylax at Naupaktos, an office elsewhere held by a man (Dikaiarchos (11) of Naupaktos). Since, like other public offices, this will have been elective, Lanassa had been the choice of the electorate of the city. These items might be held to imply a certain lightening of the social enclosure around such women; alternatively their social condition may never have been as restrictive in Aitolia as it was in, for example, Athens, where substantially greater quantities of source material are available. In this connection it may be pertinent to point out the readiness of Aitolian women to take part in the defence of their homelands, as in the case of the attack on Kallipolis by the Kelts in 279. It is the sort of behaviour which would either confirm their relative independence, or can argue for it, by comparison with other, more 'sophisticated', areas.

[3] S. B. Pomeroy, Goddesses, Whores, Wives and Slaves, New York, 1975, 130, has made the point, but without detail; C. W. Tucker, 'Women in the manumission inscriptions at Delphi', Transactions of the American Philosophical Association, 112, 1982, 225–238, is concerned solely with slaves.

The non-manumission notices of women are mainly in other inscriptions, where women were honoured with statues, or are memorialised on grave stelai. Few of the dedications provide reasons: few of the stelai provide any detail other than names. One woman is known as a murderer: Orthoboule who killed her husband, the ex-strategos and party leader Proxenos of Trichonos; her punishment, if that is what it was, was exile. This cannot be put down to the fact that she was a woman; it is more likely she avoided punishment because her crime was not seen to be heinous by those in power.

Slaves

Of the 215 slaves recorded in the Aitolian manumission inscriptions (none are named in any of the literary sources or elsewhere than in manumissions) 102 were women and 113 were men (47.4% and 52.6%). This is a different ratio between the sexes than might be expected, for the overall totals of the Delphian manumissions show a bias towards freeing women in the proportion of three women to every two men, and sufficient work has been done on these documents for these proportions, if not the precise figures, to be accepted.[4] The smaller numbers of Aitolians involved make this a proportion liable to alteration, but the Aitolian manumissions do amount to one fifth of the total of Delphian manumissions.[5] If the Delphian proportions had held true in Aitolia the totals would have been 129 women and 86 men. This is a fairly substantial difference, despite the relatively small numbers. Given the fact that several different temples are involved, including Delphi, it is reasonable to assume it represents a true difference, not one due to accidents of discovery.

One aspect of this—the concentration of female manumissions at Phistyon and of males at Naupaktos—has been mentioned already, but these two cancel each other out to some extent, and we cannot account for the variation wholly that way. The matter is of wider importance than the mere counting of heads, for it raises the difficult issue of how far the manumissions recorded reflect the slave population as a whole, and how far the practice of manumission was a reflection of local attitudes to slaves. On the first glance, one would assume that the higher proportion of women slaves being freed at Delphi—certainly a wider population than that in Aitolia—might be the result of the division of labour between male and female slaves. Women being used domestically, and men for heavier outdoor work such as farming and mining, would obviously result in different rates of survival. In Attika, for instance, male slaves were used in the Laurion mines, from which the only likely release would be death; it follows that the higher proportion of women slaves being freed might reflect the fact that fewer men were left alive to be freed, as well as the virtual impossibility of gaining freedom from such servitude as the mines. Therefore it would be unlikely that the actual slave population proportions in Attika would be reflected in the manumissions. Domestic slaves, on the other hand, were much more likely to be women, and were also more likely to provoke affection from the owners, which was surely one factor in their manumission, and would also have better opportunities for accumulating sufficient money of their own to pay the manumission fee.

[4] These proportions originate with M. Bloch, Die Freilassungsbedingungen des Delphischen Freilassungsinschriften, Strassburg 1914, 16, note 14, and are repeated, each time quoting a different count, by K. Hopkins, Conquerors and Slaves, 140, and Tucker 'Women', 225. The need for each researcher to recount the totals, partly due to new discoveries, and partly to mistakes (perceived or actual) by predecessors, suggests that the proportions are, in fact, accurate.

[5] Hopkins, Conquerors and Slaves, counts 1213 (737 female); Mulliez, 'Les Actes', put the number of inscriptions at between 1200 and 1250—though, since some inscriptions name more than one slave to be freed, the actual number of freed slaves was larger.

Thus the different proportions in Aitolia must indicate a real difference in the slave populations. Presumably the absence of mines, the smallness of the urban population, and the pastoral emphasis in Aitolian farming practice, meant that there was less scope for the sort of industrial slavery which killed off slaves prematurely. The slaves in Aitolia may well therefore have had a better chance of living long enough to be manumitted than in areas such as Attika or Sicily. However, in the absence of any indication as to the occupations of either the slaves or the freed men and women this speculation cannot be confirmed.

One aspect is, however, clear. Slaves were brought into Aitolia from outside, though perhaps the numbers are not sufficient to confirm the suggestion that Aitolians made their living by raiding other lands. Almost one third of the slaves are recorded as foreign-born (66 out of 215), though this may be an underestimate, depending on whether other foreign-born slaves were not so noted. Of those imported 27 were Greeks (41% of the total), including four whose origin is stated as from within Aitolia itself. The rest came from almost all lands from Italy to Media. Four were Macedonians (it is known that some Macedonians were sold at Naupaktos when a royal ship was captured off Messenia), and of course the Aitolian League was frequently at war with Macedon between the 230s and 188—though two out of the four Macedonian slaves were women. Four came from Italy, including two women who are recorded as Romans; the other two, both men, came from the south—Messapia and Bruttium—which may be the result of Hannibal's long series of campaigns in that area; no doubt the sale of captives was one way he financed his war. Both of the Romans were still slaves some years after the appeal by Flamininus that all Romans enslaved should be freed;[6] it would be characteristic of their relations with Rome at this time (the 190s) that the Aitolians should ignore such an appeal. Ten of the slaves, five men and five women, were from Thrace, a traditional Greek slaving area.

The east supplied most of the rest; eight from Asia Minor, nine from Syria (including a Phoenician and two Arabs) and one from Media. Almost all of these thus came from parts of the Seleukid kingdom. This could be one of the results of the campaigns of Antiochos III, though Syria was also notorious as a source of slaves throughout the Hellenistic period and later.

Of those originally from Greece outside Aitolia, ten slaves, five men and five women, came from Lakonia (or Lakedaimon). This is a high proportion, and along with those from Thrace formed the largest single group by origin. Of the rest, Thessaly was the home of four of the slaves, possibly the result of Aitolian warfare in that area. No other Greek area produced more than two slaves. Considering the repeated invasions of Lakonia in the late third and early second centuries this high proportion is not, perhaps, too surprising. Some of them may have been aged survivors of the Aitolian campaign there in 240/239, which netted a supposed 50,000 captives; but there were so many other campaigns through that disturbed land that this cannot be a safe conclusion.

It is, of course, always possible to ascribe these slaves to warfare, but the majority were not enslaved directly by Aitolians, who had contact (as the section on external relations suggests) with the rest of Greece and the Aegean area in the main. Non-Greek slaves must have been bought by Aitolians at the usual slave markets. It must not be seen as a major trade, however. 149 of the slaves have no origin recorded. Some will certainly have been of foreign birth, but the common practice of recording a foreign origin does imply that the largest proportion of those with no origin recorded were of local, Aitolian, origin. That is, they were 'born in the house', or, as four are noted, they came from other parts of Aitolia. Aitolians thus appear, in this as in other matters, to be behaving in exactly the same way as other Greeks. Slavery was part of Aitolian society, and slaves were acquired in the same way as by other Greeks: mainly by breeding, but others came by purchase, by kidnapping, and by capture in war.

Needless to say, apart from the relatively small numbers involved, the fact that these details derive from manumissions means that they may not be a wholly accurate reflection of the slave population of Aitolia. The slaves recorded by manumissions are, by definition, a very select group. We know nothing of those who lived and died in slavery. And we can derive no information from the manumissions as to the work the slaves did. It can be said, however, that Aitolians fully shared in the new Greek fashion for manumission through the temples, just as they shared the Greek use of slaves, and that they were as keen on recording that act at the temples. It is also clear that this may be seen as a route by which women were able to assert their presence as independent persons. And, despite the obvious presence of foreign-born slaves, the majority were locally born. Most slaves owned by Greeks, were Greeks.

The Witnesses

The manumissions at the temples involved considerable numbers of people, apart from the owners, the priest, and the (ex-)slaves themselves. There were also people, invariably men, who stood as guarantors and witnesses. These last are a varied group. Sometimes, especially if the temple was a local one for the participants, all the witnesses came from the home town of the manumitters. At Delphi, the witnesses were often from that city. This implies that they were recruited on the spot for the occasion, perhaps from people who just happened to be present at the time of the transaction: there are occasions when witnesses came from several different places, some unconnected with either the temple or the transaction. But there are others where it is clear that a party of people had arrived from the home of slave owner. In these cases it is clear that they had come to the temple for the particular occasion of the manumission. So, for example, when the slaves Seima and Bouba were freed at Phistyon by their Boukatian owners, seven of the witnesses were from Boukateion itself, as was one of the recording clerks; and when the slave Mnaseas was freed by his Thermian owner, three witnesses came from Thermos, but there were six others who came from three other miscellaneous places. Those from Phistyon would be locals, but others were from Boukateion and were presumably associated with the visit for the manumission, and some were from Peleios; they were presumably recruited on the spot. They were, perhaps, visitors to the temple—pilgrims, that is.

At the same time, there are men whose names appear repeatedly in manumission inscriptions. Sometimes they were local officials, and the manumissions are validated by the presiding magistrate and by the priest on duty. At the same time, often they were witnesses. As an example, Alexiadas (2) of Bouttos, is named on three manumissions in his capacity as archon of the town, but he also appears as a witness on four other manumissions, of various dates; similarly Amynandros (5) of the same place appears as archon twice, and twice more in other capacities. It could be, of course, that these men were present because they had a function in the temple—a very likely case for the local oligarchs—or because they happened to be hanging about the temple at the time, but it could also be that they were present because they were keen to free slaves. One would like to think so.

3. NAMES AND NAMING

The great majority of names used by Aitolians were those incorporating human qualities or hopes. Names derived from those of the gods were generally few, and people named for human rulers still fewer. The variety of names used was very wide. In this it is reasonable to assume that the Aitolians were little different from other peoples of Greece.

The incorporation of particular human qualities such as is suggested by names beginning with elements such as 'Alexi-' and 'Kalli-' or by hopes such as 'Niko-' and 'Aristo-' was common in Greek naming. The practice of using the same name in successive generations was widespread, as was a punning or semi-punning practice. So Leontomenes' son was Leon, who in turn named his own son after his father; Lykopos named his sons Polemarchos and Hageson, who both named their own sons Lykopos. The practice is so well known that it does not need further demonstration, and I have used it as the basis for some of the speculative reconstructions of Aitolian families in that section.

The naming practices do thus suggest that Greeks—and Aitolians—were conscious of the meaning, in everyday terms, of the names they gave their offspring, where the names had a clear meaning. So Sotion called his son Delphion, a clear reference to the sanctuary, echoing in a way his own name; and Delphion called his daughter Kallisto; a devotion to Apollo's temple is clearly implied. A variation would use the same prefix but add on a different suffix for different offspring; so Timotheos' sons were Timotheos and Timokrates. It is clear that families sometimes used only a restricted repertoire of names which recur in different generations in different lines of descent—so the Amphissan family descended from Xenophanes used that name and Archytas and Lamenos for seven sons and grandsons. This is a practice visible also in royal families—as it is to this day—but was clearly not one restricted to them.

But there were also plenty of other families in which these practices did not occur, or in which the number of children who were born made it necessary to use new names. Only in such a way could the name Alexandros become popular: it was the only 'royal' name to be widely used, with 27 examples from all parts of the league, and the league's history is almost entirely post-Alexander the Great. Yet at the same time the use of the element 'Alexi-' was popular in plenty of other combinations, so it may be that the popularity of Alexandros was partly due to the popularity of 'Alexi-'. It is also the fact that Alexander was Aitolia's enemy, for he threatened to break up the league. Even more telling, the commander of Aitolia's forces in 322 was named Alexandros; since he will have been born before Alexander the Great, the name was clearly current in the Aitolian League territory and among its peoples before Alexander's career gave his name a boost of popularity. Trying to account for the popularity of names is even more liable to diverse considerations than most historical research.

The only other royal names with any number of examples were Demetrios and Antiochos, with nine and eight instances respectively. However, the near-absence of Seleukos (three examples, one mis-spelled, and one for a slave) rather suggests that Antiochos was used not because it was a royal name but for other reasons. The dates of the appearance of these names—in adults—also suggest that royalty was not being commemorated: Antiochos appears first in 271/270, and Antiochos I only became prominent after 302 BC; it then does not appear again in Aitolia until 164; Seleukos does not appear until 199, after three kings of that name had reigned and died. 'Ptolemaios' appears only five times, an extraordinarily low number considering the relatively high number of Aitolians who served in the Ptolemaic army as mercenaries, and the constant use of the name for the Egyptian kings. The Macedonian kingly names are as few, apart from Alexandros—Antigonos once, Kassandros once, Lysimachos once, Demetrios nine times (but six of these may in fact be only one man), Philippos four times. This paucity might be put down to the political enmity of Aitolia towards Macedon, except that all the datable examples of these names actually come from the period when Aitolia was locked into a series of Macedonian wars.

It would seem, therefore, that, with the single exception of Alexandros, the Aitolians did not name their children with famous men in mind, and Alexandros itself is a thoroughly ambiguous example. Nor did they turn to the gods and goddesses in any numbers. The sanctuaries at Delphi and Thermos both housed temples to Apollo, with, at Thermos, Artemis also involved, who was also the goddess at Kalydon. If any gods should be popular in Aitolia, they were Apollo and Artemis. Yet with the exception of lists of names on one inscription, names compounded of 'Apollo-' appear only eleven times. Artemis appears in only two examples, with the same exception.

This exception, however, is telling. This is a list of names inscribed on columns at the temple at Thermos (IG IX.1.60). There is no indication of the purpose of the list, but it would be reasonable to suppose that the names are a list of benefactors of the temple. This is perhaps supported by the high incidence of names compounded of the god's name—Apollodoros, Apollonides nine times, Apollonios eleven times, one incomplete—there are also four Artemidoroi. (This is also the source of the six examples of Demetrios mentioned above.) Other gods are also unusually well represented: Asklepiades five times, Bakchios three, and a few more. This is a much higher incidence of divine names than in the general population as represented in the names surviving from other contexts. The high repetition-factor might suggest that individuals were recorded more than once, perhaps with successive donations, but even so the incidence is still higher than expected.

The tentative conclusion must be that employing the names of gods in or as names for humans meant something to the bearers of these names, a conclusion which was reached concerning those names employing human qualities and goals. The choice of name for a child was therefore a serious business, in which parents took account of the actual meaning of the name. (This is in strong contrast to modern practice, of course, where most people probably do not know the meaning of their name.) It follows that, along with the conclusion reached earlier that the Greeks had a relatively free choice of personal names, the names they did choose reflect the aspirations of those who awarded them—that is, the parents, specifically, presumably, the father. Since there were so few royal names used, it would be reasonable to conclude that 'republican' sentiment was normal—and the relatively greater frequency of names compounded of 'Damo-' and 'Aristo-' may be a further sign of this.

The names given to women do not show any serious difference from the pattern, such as it is, detected among men. There are fewer royal names—Kleupatra, but no Laodike or Berenike—and the divine names are of nymphs rather than goddesses, but the overwhelming choice is for names reflecting qualities—'Aristo-', and 'Kalli-' again particularly.

Looking at names for slaves, there are several observations which may be made. First, a considerable number are place names, possibly reflecting origins—Istros, Lebanos, Melita, for example; others are names which were clearly retained by the slaves even when not Greek—Dazima, Dazimos, and Kotys for Thracians, for example, or Orontas for a Mede. A considerable number of slaves bore names which suggest a deliberate attempt to humilitate them, or perhaps to see them in the status of children—Soto, Bouba, Soso—perhaps because they were born and brought up in the household and those were the names they had as children. Generally the names are a selection very similar to those of the non-slave population, perhaps with fewer divine and royal names, which were perhaps considered unsuitable for slaves. But, given their servile condition, names using the elements 'Aristo-' and 'Niko-' have a pecularly acrid stench to them. Also noticeable is a certain tendency to use the element 'Sos-', as though the owners wanted to reassure themselves about the safety of owning another human being. It was a time, after all, in Chios, in Attika, in Sicily, of slave uprisings. These names may be indications—no more—of the ambiguous attitude of Greeks towards slavery and slaves.

The overall conclusion is that naming was clearly thought to have a quasi-magical significance (as, of course, it has in all societies), and that awarding a name which suggested certain qualities—goodness, strength, wealth, bravery, power—was intended to impart those qualities to the child. It may be a small element of support for my contention that the league was essentially a peaceful political organism that those given names using 'war' (polemos) as an element numbered no more than fifty individuals, with 'soldier' (stratos) only another forty.

A different measure is to isolate the names most commonly used. There are well over 700 names which appear in the sources only once.[1] For the most common names, defined arbitrarily as those carried by ten or more individuals, 665 people used 44 names between them; of the slightly less common names, those carried by between five and nine individuals, 100 names were borne by 652 people. But none of these names is used more than 35 times (Lykos), and even this collection of the most commonly used names does not account for more than a third of the total number of people recorded. That is, over two-thirds of the approximately 3300 Aitolians listed in the prosopography were given uncommon or unique names. Choosing a name in Aitolia (as in the rest of Greece) was a very individual matter; there was no hesitation in inventing names, or in using highly unusual examples.

This is all, of course, a thoroughly traditional matter. The Aitolian practices in naming their children show little or no effects of the great changes of the Hellenistic age: nothing except perhaps the name of Alexandros in reference to the development of the great monarchies, little concerning the newly popular mystery religions, nothing on philosophy—Sokrates' name appears eight times, but there is not one Plato of Aristoteles, and none of the more recent men, the Stoics, Epicureans, and so on. So far as names can indicate anything about a society, Aitolian society maintained its old values.

4. ORIGINS

A discussion of the places from which Aitolians came is far too dependent on the discovery of the source material—inscriptions—to be of much use. It shows, for instance, that a large number of men whose names are known came from Amphissa, which is the result of a large number of manumissions from Delphi; yet Amphissa was by no means the most important city of the league, either in size or in terms of the active participation of its citizens in league affairs. Similarly, a large number of men are recorded as from Bouttos, because—again—a considerable number of manumission inscriptions have been found there; yet no-one would claim any great importance for the town. At the other extreme, the number of men from Thermos is very small, despite the place being the provenance of many inscriptions; this must surely reflect the fact that the place was not a settlement of any size, but only a periodic gathering place; yet it was clearly important as the centre of the league.

Simply counting origins, therefore, does not do any more than record the presence of discovered records of one sort or another, though for the sake of completeness a count is given at the end of this section. On the other hand, the origin of the officials of the league can tell us a good deal about the league, its operation, and the stages by which it grew. I shall therefore concentrate on those officials.

The most important offical was always the strategos. The office of hipparchos may have been a later development; the job of grammateus was always purely administrative, and not executive, and was later divided between two men, and relatively few of these officials are known. There were also Aitolian epimeletai at Delphi, but only five are known, and this is probably another late development in the last two decades of the league's history. There are a few men recorded as holding the offices of epilektarchon or tamias, but these are almost as few as the Delphian epimeletai. And there were the Aitolians, always distinguished as such, who were sent to Delphi as hieromnemones of the Amphiktyony. The origin of these men gives a clue to the geographical distribution of power within the league. It would be important, for example, if one city dominated the official lists at any period, or if a group of cities did so; conversely a wide geographical spread would be equally revealing. (Those recorded as proxenoi sponsors are discussed in the next section.)

There are, of course, difficulties and obscurities in this sort of exercise. Particularly in the early years the origins of many of the officials are not recorded. This is especially the case with the hieromnemones, where origins are only recorded for the last two decades of the third century—and there are very few known after 200, partly due to lack of source of materials, partly due to the restriction of Aitolian membership of the Amphiktyony after 190. This is also the case with significant numbers of other officals as well. Further, only the strategoi of all the officials are known even by name throughout most of the league's history, even with gaps; and the lists of hipparchoi and grammateis are woefully thin (see the list under 'Magistrates'). Any conclusions, therefore, must be regarded as no more than tentative.

The limited numbers have dictated that it is best to group the data into periods of twenty years at a time, beginning in 280. There are thus seven sets of data (280–261 through to 160–141), in which, ignoring those whose origin is unknown, there is a total of 104 strategoi, 60 hipparchoi and grammateis, 139 hieromnemones and five epimeletai, seven epilektarchontes, and eight tamiai. In that time there were 142 strategoi (two years seeing the election of suffects to replace resigned or dead men), and so the percentage of these who are known by origin is high (73%). But there were also about 300 hipparchoi and grammateis elected, and so the proportion of these officials who are known is thus very low (only 20%). The number of possible hieromnemones is more difficult to calculate, due to the fluctuations of Aitolian membership, but there were perhaps a thousand between 278 and 167, and so the proportion whose origin is known is even lower, only 13%. Further, the distribution of these numbers through the seven consecutive periods is uneven: half of the known hieromnemones, for instance, are in the period 220–201, since this is the time that origins were recorded on the inscriptions; even so this is less than a quarter of those who held the office in those years, since the incidence of inscription-survival is fairly low for that double-decade. The distribution of known strategoi is more even, and is almost complete in four of the periods; for hipparchoi and grammateis, however, even the period 220–201 has only nineteen out of a possible 45 known. Clearly therefore the conclusions which might be derived from the figures for the strategoi will be more convincing by far than any which might be produced for the rest. The totals for hipparchoi and grammateis have been boosted slightly by the inclusion of the other officials (epimeletai, and so on), but these are too few to have any serious effect. The possible numbers of these officials are beyond conjecture, since we have no information about when they were elected, how often, or in what numbers.

Strategoi

Taking the whole period of 160 years, five cities consistently produced men who became strategoi. Only one, Trichonos, appears in every twenty-year block, but Naupaktos and Kalydon only missed in one, and Kallia/Kallipolis and Pleuron in two. All these are cities which were founder members of the league. Other cities were not members until later, but precision is not possible—though it is obviously an explanation for some cities sending no officials in some periods. Seven cities appear only once, and some of these are founder members as well. Two cities appear in only two of the blocks—though in each case this represented the activity of only one man. However, taking the twenty-year blocks in sequence, a clear pattern does emerge.

In the first period, 280–261, five cities produced nine strategoi between them, and in the next period five cities produced ten. But two cities in the first period (Eupalion and Herakleia) produced none in the second, to be replaced by two 'new' cities (Kalydon and Pleuron). In the third period, there were six cities represented, all but one (Eupalion) of those so far listed. In those sixty years, only half the strategoi can be classified by origin, but even so the limited source of the men is worth remarking. Yet at the same time, in this restricted number no city is represented more than three times in any double-decade. Two elements may thus be deduced. First the origins of strategoi in the first sixty years in which origins are known really were restricted to a relatively few places; but, second, the distribution among those places was fairly wide: a narrow range of sources, but no single place dominated.

In the sixty years after 220, however, that pattern changes. In the successive double-decades 220–201, 200–181, and 180–161 the number of places originating strategoi expanded from six in the preceding period (240–221) to nine, seven, and then thirteen places, and in each period new cities appear in the list. Two of the originally productive places declined—Kallia had only one after 201, and Naupaktos only two—and Herakleia produced none (not surpisingly after its sack in 191 and the deportation of its leading men as prisoners to Rome). On the other hand, nine places appeared for the first time as sources of strategoi. That is, the origins of strategoi was much wider than it had been, and whereas the original cities continued by and large to produce strategoi (only Herakleia dropping out), many new sources appeared. The oligarchy expanded, that is.

In the final double-decade (160–141) the situation reversed. One new source appeared (Apeirikos), but only four other sources of strategoi existed—Trichonos, Kalydon, Arsinoe, and Stratos—even though almost all the strategoi and their origins are known. This fits in well, of course, with the drastic weakening of the league after 167, with its loss of territory, and with the behind-the-scenes dictatorship of Lykiskos which resulted from the massacres and proscriptions associated with his regime. An oligarchy had been re-established, but it was on a much narrower basis than that which had preceded it.

It is a revealing sequence. The steady expansion of sources from which strategoi were drawn implies an openness of the oligarchy to recruiting new men. This is suggested even in the first double-decade, when one of the strategoi was from Herakleia, which had joined the league only in 280, and another was from Eupalion, a minor Lokrian city which produced no other magistrate for the league again. New cities were added every double-decade from then on (except 240–221) until the last. No single city dominated, unless it was Trichonos, whence came seven strategoi in each of two successive double-decades (240–221 and 220–201)—but there were forty-one in total in that time.

Hipparchoi and Grammateis

The relatively small number of known officials, other than strategoi, and the low percentage of those whose origins are also known, means that it is difficult to draw any conclusions of any seriousness from the data, but by looking at the strategoi first it is possible to take these results as a standard of comparison. And in doing so some major contrasts do appear.

At first it seems that the patterns detected among the strategoi are repeated. The main cities—Naupaktos, Trichonos, Herakleia, Kalydon, Pleuron—which appeared in the first double-decade, recur, and appear again throughout the succeeding periods. But Kallia is missing, and no man from that city is recorded as holding any of these offices. Yet Trichonos, once again, has representatives in every block of years (except the last, when only two origins are known) which is a remarkable record. Nine of the known 54 officials are from Trichonos.

There is a gradually widening spread of sources from which these officials were recruited. This is similar to that among the strategoi, with new cities being added to the list in each double decade except one, even through to the end. The exception is 180–161, when only one man's origin is known anyway—he is from Trichonos, of course. Even in the final double-decade, a new origin appears, when there are origins known for only two men. So far, therefore, the overall patterns found among the strategoi are replicated.

But there are also differences. Whereas in the first double-decade, 280–261, only five places produced strategoi, the hipparchoi and grammateis came from twice as many places, and only one, Naupaktos, produced more than one, and this despite the same number of officials being known. In the same way, the recruitment of officials from new sources began at once and continued right through, whereas it was not until after 220 that the strategoi-source pool seriously expanded. And, again in contrast to the strategos-pattern, the new sources are not simply added to the old; they seem to replace them. This is in part, of course, the result of the paucity of known officials, but it is worth remark nonetheless. Of the places producing these officials in 280–261, five never did so again, and only one of them did so in the next double-decade. Indeed, apart from Trichonos, only Naupaktos had citizens in these offices in more than two of the periods. It almost looks as though there was a deliberate policy of spreading the jobs among as many places as possible.

(It is possible that the men who became strategoi had already held earlier offices, and it might be thought that the exiguous numbers of the lower officials could be enlarged by counting in the strategoi as well. But it is not in fact certain that there was a sort of cursus of Aitolian public offices, in the Roman sense. Only a very few men who became strategoi are known to have held other posts beforehand—Charixenos (2), Ariston (5), Skopas (3), Alexandros (12), Phaineas (3)—the only man known to have held all three offices—and Thoas, in the third century. The fact that the practice is better recorded in the last fifteen years is probably due to the better sources, but it may also be due to the practice of a ladder of offices being developed. It is quite possible that most of the strategoi in the early period of the league were elected to the post without having to display their expertise in the 'lower' offices; indeed, it could be that the duties of the three offices were seen as sufficiently distinct so that being grammateus or hipparchos was not regarded as a sensible preparation for being strategos. Further, in the cases of those who are known to have held more than one office, there is no regularity in the time-distance between them. Ariston (5) was hipparchos in 243/242 but not strategos until 221/220; Phaineas (3), on the other hand, held all three offices within ten years. So it is not possible to retroject the holders of the strategos office back into the statistics for the other offices. They have to be kept distinct.)

It is necessary to reiterate: there are too few records for conclusions concerning the offices of hipparchos and grammateus to be taken too seriously. The only one I would put forward as having been demonstrated clearly is that the hipparchoi and grammateis tended to be found from a much wider geographical area than the strategoi, from the very first. And they came from smaller places; the strategoi tended to be from the larger and more important cities.

Hieromnemones

The double-decade 220–201 is the period in which the number of Aitolians who were hieromnemones was greatest, the period when their origins are recorded most frequently, and the time when most of them are known. For all that period there were never less than eleven men holding the office every year, and sometimes as many as fifteen: a total of at least 260 posts to be filled. But of these only 88 holders are known by name, and of those the origins of no more than 62 are known, which is less than a quarter of the possible total. Despite the lost names, the detail is thus the most extensive of any of these offices.

'New' cities		7	7	30	6	1

These men came from no less than 42 different places. Only 14 places produced more than one hieromnemon in that twenty years, and none of these had more than three. The geographical spread is expanded when the rest of the officials are taken into account, to a total of 61 different places. It is thus very wide. Men attended at Delphi as Aitolians from Akarnania (Matropolis, Limnaia), from Thessaly (Thebes, Pharsalos, Melitaia), from Phokis (Dymaia, Phanoteus) as well as Aitolia proper, from Doris, and from that part of Lokris which had long been in the league. They came from many of the most important cities—Kallipolis, Kalydon, Naupaktos, Stratos, Ambrakia, Lamia, and so on—and from villages whose location is lost—Apeirikos, Hyposeiros, Rhadeos, and a dozen others, and even from the thinly populated Dolopia. Hieromnemones were recruited, that is to say, from every possible part of the league.

This is not, so far as the exiguous figures for the other double-decades show, an unusual spread. The sources of earlier members, when the origins were not deliberately recorded, are known only because they were recorded elsewhere, and so the bias is towards men who held other offices as well, or whose origin is recorded in some other way, with the result that there is a preponderance of men from cities, since these are the men who are more likely to be recorded in inscriptions. The double-decade 260–241 had the next largest number whose origins are known (after 220–201)—only 32 out of a possible 236 or so (14%)—and most of them came from such cities as Kallia, Trichonos, and so on, but others came from Skarpheia and Opous in Opountian Lokris, the latter a city which was in the league only a relatively short time, and from several unknown places. It can thus be concluded with some confidence that participation in the duties at Delphi was something which was spread throughout the league. It may be in fact that anyone who wished, and could afford to go, would get his chance. Some men went more than once, one even four times, and this suggests that attendance was voluntary. Yet the geographical spread also suggests that some selection took place, with the intention of involving as many communities as posssible.

Minor Officials

Three other officials are recorded in Aitolian inscriptions, all of them mainly in the decade following 271. These are epilektarchontes, seven of which are listed in the Aitolo-Akarnanian treaty of 271, whose duties are wholly unknown, tamiai, financial officials, also listed in the Akarnanian treaty, and Aitolians serving as Soteria officials. Of the first two the origins of all are known, though a tamias later in the century is only known by name; of the Soteria-men, only those known in some other capacity have their origins recorded. This is thirteen men (one is known later), while another twenty are only names. This gives a total of 26 men from the three offices, but this is not enough to be worth tabulating.

The origins of these men are as various as those who were hipparchoi and grammateis, and considerably wider than that of the contemporary strategoi. The main cities are there, of course, Naupaktos (two Soteria-men), Kalydon and Kallia (an epilektarchon and a Soteria-man each), Trichonos (a tamias and two Soteria-men), and Herakleia (two Soteria-men). But the rest came from a wide range of small places. Only one of these is represented twice—Poteidania had a tamias and a Soteria representative—but no less than eleven places were the homes of other officials. Once again the pattern recorded amongst the higher officials is repeated: although the big cities were the sources of many of the officials (eleven out of the 26 came from the five main cities) they were not completely dominant by any means, and office-holding was very widely distributed geographically throughout the league.

I append a list of places, with a count of the number of individuals known from each:

Amphissa

It is, as ever, difficult to draw conclusions from negatives, but attention must be drawn to one glaring blank in the above lists and comments. Of the cities of the Aitolian League, only Amphissa produced no men who held any of the league offices—except that of proxenos sponsor. This cannot, this time, be put down to an absence of inscriptional evidence, for there are more names of Amphissans known than from any other individual place apart from Naupaktos. The city was, if not the largest or most important in the league, at least one of the larger ones. Such a place should have produced its quota of magistrates during a league membership of well over a century. Since it did not some reasons must be suggested.

A possibility is that Amphissa as a community was less than enthusiastic about membership of the league. It is probable that its arrival in the league was fairly reluctant, but once in, like every other community, it was staunch and loyal. There was never a rebellion by any community in the league. When the Roman war was going badly, Amphissa was put under a strict siege by M'. Acilius Glabrio's army, during which the lower city was conquered, and resistance reduced to the acropolis. But at no point was there any suggestion that the city would surrender.

Again, this is a species of negative evidence. It is, however, all we have. The positive indications of Amphissan attitudes do not exist. Since the opportunities for participation in the league offices clearly existed, the lack of Amphissan participation must be taken as a deliberate choice by the leading men of the city. It must be concluded that Amphissa's membership of the league was accepted, and the resistance to the siege in 191 implies that this acceptance, by that time, was fully shared by the inhabitants—but was to a degree conditional.

5. EXTERNAL RELATIONS

Aitolians Abroad

The great majority of Aitolians recorded as living and working outside their homeland were mercenary soldiers. Of the others, the non-soldiers, most (ten out of sixteen) were recorded on grave stelai at Athens; two more died and were buried at Alexandria. 49 Aitolian mercenaries are known by name, coming from all parts of the league territory, and serving at all ranks from private soldier up to army commander and provincial governor; even in two cases, heads of state, at least temporarily.

The sources are, of course, biased: on the one hand, there is a bias towards the higher ranks and, on the other, towards the well-preserved records. Thus the high proportion of Aitolian civilians recorded at Athens is the result of a well-investigated, well-recorded, and well-published set of cemetery records.[1] It is also, of course, due to the attraction of Athens for non-Athenians in the Hellenistic period (and for historians and archaeologists in the modern world). It was a rich city, a commercial centre well connected throughout the Mediterranean world, a magnet for the rich, for the ambitious, for those seeking education. Even so one can hardly count the Aitolians living—or rather, dying—there as a large migration. A full discovery of other places would certainly shift the balance of numbers away from this Athenian predominance.

A similar situation has biased our knowledge of the soldiers. The better, or perhaps more numerous, records are those on papyrus, so it is hardly surprising that Aitolians serving for Ptolemaic pay should be the most numerous in the records: 28 out of the 49.[2] Only four are known to have served in the Seleukid army, and three are known in Antigonid forces, and these are figures from the whole of the Hellenistic period. Yet we know that there were several hundred with Pyrros in Italy, though no names survive.[3] Two others are known of, anonymously, in Demetrios Polkioketes' army in Syria, where they deserted in timely fashion to warn Seleukos of the imminence of a desperate break-out attempt.[4] Of those who were employed by the Attalids, only a small group who served in garrison in Lilaia in 208 are known by name;[5] there were undoubtedly others. Further, of the four known to have served the Seleukids, three are known to have originally been in Ptolemaic pay and to have switched sides.[6] And all four were of army commander and provincial governor rank. Desertion took place at all levels.

Men of that eminence tended to be recorded in the literary sources, but those at the lowest ranks are generally omitted. Inscriptions and papyri give a slightly more balanced view, but the bias is still towards recording officers. It does appear that men who are named, especially in the papyri, were concerned to have their rank recorded, and so we may assume that a man who does not make a claim to a particular rank was a private soldier. On this basis we know the names of ten privates and twelve officers (and seven more officers are named in the literary sources). Only one of these men is stated to be a colonist,[7] but since they are normally serving soldiers, any transition to colonist would probably come at the end of their service, if at all. Only one mercenary can be located as returning to his homeland (Panaitolos), but there were surely many more. A group of men who recorded their membership of the 'mess of Dionysios'[8] were probably not mercenaries, for the Aitolians only rarely employed them, but men in a particular Aitolian military unit.

The soldiers are recorded at several places in Egypt, in the Oxyrhynchite and Arsinoite nomes, which have been especially productive of papyri, and at Abydos in the south. Others have been recorded in the Ptolemiac possessions outside Egypt. A garrison at Samos contained Aitolian mercenaries,[9] and several officers are recorded in service in Palestine and Phoenicia. These latter are known during the Fourth and Fifth Syrian Wars (219–217 and 202–196), when, as mentioned, several of them were seduced into Antiochos III's service. They went on to serve him for a number of years in high positions. One man, Timarchos, may have been in Ptolemaic service when he seized power at Miletos c.260, and held it for a couple of years as tyrant.

One of the most attractive fields of employment for mercenaries was in fact the very area of Timarchos' exploit. Apart from the men who served in Samos, there were Aitolians on both sides at the siege of Sardis in 213,[10] a group of Aitolians are recorded on a stone from either Chios or Erythrai,[11] and one man was employed at Tralles.[12] The constant disputes between kings and between cities and between kings and cities in the area provided a soldier's market.

The number of high commanders who were Aitolians is of some interest. The only two known of in Alexander's forces were of high rank,[13] though the highest posts were always filled, of course, by Macedonians. The only Aitolian recorded by name in service in the west, Erymnon, was entrusted with the joint-government of Syracuse when Agathokles left the city in 306 to campaign in Africa,[14] in effect temporary head of state. Timarchos commanded in western Asia Minor before his seizure of Miletos, Theodotos, Nikolaos, and Panaitolos commanded in Ptolemaic Syria and then in the Baktrian campaign and in Asia Minor, Charimortos was elephantarchos in Egypt, Skopas commander-in-chief in Palestine, and Melankomas was governor in Cyprus in the second half of the second century, while his son, also Melankomas, governed the city of Kition. These men will have had many years of service behind them before reaching such high positions.

On the principle of a mountain peak requiring a wide base, so it may be assumed that the relatively high number of mercenary commanders from Aitolia argues a fairly large number of Aitolians serving in the lower ranks. But Aitolia was not a populous land, and on the only occasion when a deliberate attempt was made to recruit Aitolians (by Skopas at the end of the third century)[15] it was soon blocked by the Aitolian government. Therefore, it follows that the Aitolians who went overseas as soldiers did so by their own choice, and in small numbers. Pyrros had only a few hundred in his service in Italy, Ptolemy V perhaps not more than a couple of thousand in his army in 201–200; we may assume a total at any particular time of perhaps no more than a few thousand spread throughout the Hellenistic world's armies. It was not a total guaranteed to produce either wealth for Aitolia or influence for the league—particularly when desertion was as relatively common in the higher ranks as it seems to have been.

Proxenoi

The incidence of proxeny agreements makes it clear that Aitolians had extensive relations overseas. The dating of these agreements at times of political upheaval implies strongly that one of the main purposes of the agreements was political. Indeed the timing is not so much at as after political problems have been dealt with. The rapid expansion of the Aitolian League in the 270s was succeeded by a very extensive programme of proxeny-making in 273–270. The war with Achaia in the 240s was similarly followed by a sequence of proxenies in the early 230s, and other agreements came in the 210s, the 190s, and the 180s, all post-crises.

The places from which the agreements were made show certain patterns. Herakleia-in-Oitia, for example, made agreements predominantly with places around the coasts of the Aegean. There are thirty known agreements by men from the city; the objects of two are not preserved and two are with cities in south Italy; the rest are all with Aegean cities or with those on the Pontos or the Propontis. This might seem to be what is only to be expected, since Herakleia itself faced the Aegean, but other places, which did not face the Aegean, show very similar patterns. The cities along the north coast of the Gulf of Corinth—Amphissa, Pleuron, Physkeis, Kalydon, Naupaktos—show the same connections, and only Naupaktos of them all made agreements with cities to the west. Those in the interior of the league territory, of which Trichonos, Arsinoe, Lysimacheia, and Stratos show at least three proxeny-connections each, again show the same eastward pattern. Arsinoe had an agreement with Taras, and Trichonos was connected with four places to the west, but all the rest were with places to the east (a total of 26 agreements). Some cities specialised in agreements with places to the south, in the Peloponnese, as Pleuron did with all six of its agreements, and Kallia with three out of the few whose cities were legible—the fourth was with Plataia. These places to the south may well be thought of, in fact, as neighbours, being accessible by sea with some ease. Others, like Plataia, were local by land. Opous' three agreements were all with Boiotian cities—Orchomenos, Anthedon, and Megara—and Lamia's two were both with Matropolis in Thessaly.

[13] Glaukos (1) and Lykidas (1).
[14] Diod. 20.16.1.
[15] Pol. 15.25.16; Livy 31.43.5.

All this suggests another dimension besides the political one which is implied by the dating of these agreements. Some at least of these proxeny-agreements were made on the initiative of the men of the individual Aitolian cities, and were made for the benefit of their home-cities as much as for the league as a whole. This is the obvious explanation for the restricted geographical range of the agreements made by Pleuron, Opous and Lamia. These would seem to be supplementary agreements over and above those organised by the league as a political unit. So here we have evidence of the individual connections and relationships between Aitolian cities and foreign neighbours.

The more distant relationships are also less individual. Athens, for example, had a whole series of agreements with different Aitolian cities; Corinth had agreements with four or five Aitolian cities; Chalkis in Euboia with four, and Eretria in the same island with four, only one of which was the same as any of Chalkis'. This even applies to the most distant connections: Kalchedon in Bithynia had three agreements, with three different Aitolian cities. They are thus not so much connections with these particular cities as between the Aitolian League as a whole and the foreign cities. It is the complement to the individual efforts of such places as Lamia and Opous. At the same time, the totality of these agreements shows the area of Aitolian trading links.

These connections were overwhelmingly with the Aegean basin, from Thasos to Crete, with extensions into the Propontis (Kyzikos, Byzantion, Kalchedon) and the Pontos (Herakleia Pontike, Sinope). To the east of Rhodes, however, Aitolian connections were even fewer than with the west, with late agreements only with Alexandria, Antioch, Perge, Soli, and Sidon.

There seems little reason to believe that much trade was carried on outside Greece and the Aegean. No doubt the great entrepots of Athens, Delos, Corinth, Rhodes, and the Asian coastal cities such as Ephesos, were adequate sources of distant supplies.

Some cities were the objects of constantly renewed proxeny-agreements. Athens, again, had thirteen agreements between 272/271 and 189/188, involving eleven different Aitolian places. But some of these places are so obscure—Mystakos, Chasilios, Dexios—that it seems most unlikely that a direct connection between them and Athens ever existed other than the occasional traveller; that is, the connections were made because they were Aitolian, not because of their individual importances. Taking the set of Athenian agreements in sequence, it is also clear that a deliberate attempt was being made to keep the connection in existence: the dates are close enough together to imply a succession of proxenoi being replaced as they died or resigned: 272/271 and 271/270, 247/246, 239/238 (twice) and 238/237 (twice), 214/213 and 210/209, 189/188 (three times), and one is undated. Corinth, with fewer agreements on record shows a similar pattern: 273/272 and 271/270, one between 230 and 200, and 185/184. In all, these series of agreements imply that the Aitolian League was concerned to maintain a continuous connection with such cities.

The cities of Euboia were also carefully cultivated. Chalkis and Eretria had ten agreements between them and Histiaia and Karystos one each. All four cities had agreements in 271/270 and Eretria made five agreements in 239/238 and Chalkis two more in 214/213. It would seem that the original intention was to connect with all four, but that agreements with the smaller places proved unnecessary. Herakleia, as might by expected, was especially interested, with four agreements, but Kalydon (3), Naupaktos, Amphissa, Lysimacheia, and two small places were also involved. The Achaian cities along the south coast of the Gulf of Cornith show the same pattern: Aigion and Sikyon were as well connected as Corinth, and Dyme and Patrai had an agreement each. Further south, Lakedaimon, Messene, and Megalopolis were repeatedly the objects of agreements.

To the west, as already indicated, the connections were fewer, and even more obviously political—an agreement with Rome is dated to 271/270, just after both the final unification of Italy with the conquest of Taras and the expansion of the Aitolian League. It would seem to have been the equivalent of the modern gesture of 'recognising' a foreign regime. Another agreement with Taras itself was made in 207/206, immediately after its recovery by Rome during the Hannibalic war. Few western agreements were repeated, as though the trading links did not justify them, and the political gestures had been sufficient. But closer to home, several agreements were made with Epeiros and the Molossi.

The men who are named as standing as sponsors for proxenoi include a significantly large number of those who also served as league officials. In the years when large numbers of proxenoi were organised, the strategoi invariably stood as sponsors, and often the grammateus as well. This was so in 272/271, 271/270, and 239/248, for example, though later it was more usual for just the strategos to be the sponsor. Some men were exceptionally busy in this activity. Skopas, strategos three times between 220 and 205, stood sponsor for six cities, beginning when he was grammateus in 224/223. Trichas, who was hieromnemon at Delphi in the exceptionally busy year 271/270 was sponsor for seven cities, to which he added another in 262/261 when he was strategos.

There are also some very strange pairings indeed. It is very difficult to see what Sosthenes, the small inland city in remote Ainis, had in common with the western island of Zakynthos, though Peitholaos of the city sponsored a proxenos in 239/238; of Peitholaos nothing further is known. Similarly it is difficult to see anything other than an insult in the pairing of the great city of Antioch in Syria in 214/213 with the unknown Aitolian village of Hyaios. (This was the year in which Antiochos III besieged and captured Sardis in Asia Minor, where the Seleukid rebel Akhaios had numbers of Aitolians in his employ as mercenaries[16]—was the Antioch-Hyaios pairing a result of this development? One wonders what happened to Akhaios' Aitolian mercenaries.)

Certain absences in the record need also to be mentioned, though, of course, this is negative evidence, and of less force than the cumulation of positive evidence already discussed. It was only in 204/203, for example, that any connection was made with Alexandria-by-Egypt, even though a large Aitolian memorial to Ptolemy IV had been built at Delphi before that date, and Aitolians had been employed as mercenaries in Egypt for a century and more. The more or less contemporary arrival in Egypt of Skopas, after his failure to reform the debt problem, may be connected, as may the subsequent attempt at large-scale Ptolemaic recruitment of Aitolian mercenaries—though this came some time later. Connections with the Seleukid kingdom were almost as sparse, even though that kingdom reached as far as the Aegean coast of Asia Minor several times after 281. But particularly telling is the history of connections with the other Hellenistic great power, Macedon.

When the great proxeny-making took place in the late 270s, Macedon was included. A proxenos-agreement was made with 'Macedon' itself, presumably meaning the whole kingdom, but others were also made with the Macedonian cities of Amphipolis and Pella, and a few years later with Kassandreia also. In addition, the cities of Chalkis, Eretria, Corinth, and Athens, all then under the control of Antigonos Gonatas, were in the list, as was Larisa in Thessaly. The Euboian cities' agreements were renewed later, as was that with Athens, but no more agreements were made with Macedon, or with any of its cities, with the sole exception of one with 'Thessaly' in 210/209, no doubt because it was a contiguous territory with Aitolia. (Agreements were made with the Macedonian cities of Europos and Demetrias at some time, but the dates are not known: in the circumstances one would assume an early date.)

[16] See note 17.

These initial agreeemnts, and the failure to renew them, suggest that it was the political connection which was paramount in this case. A comparison with Epeiros, a similar land, with similar products, also to the north of Aitolia, where agreements are known in 271/270, 210/309, and 185/184 (and one more is undated) indicates that connections once made are likely to have been renewed, at least in the Greek lands. The absence of renewal for a land close to Aitolia, as Macedon was, is a clear indication of political enmity, which is the result of the frequent warfare between the two states from the 230s onwards.

6. MAGISTRATES

The incomplete nature of our knowledge of the league's officials will be clear from this list. Full sources are in the prosopography. Numbers following the dashes indicate the sequence of offices held. A depressingly large number of these are dated only approximately, and those whose dating seem secure are in fact liable to be moved a year or so as a result of further research. Very many of the earlier men are allocated to a particular year by guesswork, by assuming a normal time-gap of approximately seven years between iterated strategoi. There is no warrant for this figure, apart from deduction from the known holders, but is is a useful basis for work. Those which are especially awkwardly allocated are marked with an asterisk, and the problem is explained briefly in the note at the end. It may be assumed that the hazy dating for the strategoi applies even more strongly to the hipparchoi and the grammateis.

Nikias (21) (n.d.)	Timolochos (1) c.250
Philodamos (2) (C2)

The following Grammateis are recorded on undated seals from a house in Kallipolis; they may be officials of the league or, more likely, of the city:

Charixenos (9), Damophilos, Eunikos (6), L[. . .]niak, Lochagos (5), Lyson (4), Nikiadas (10), Seleukchos (sic), Telephon (3), Xenophon (2).

*Alexandros (1). It is not certain that he was actually strategos, though he is recorded as commanding the Aitolian army, which was, after all the function of the strategos.

*Polykritos (1)–1. I have discussed the dating of this man in The League of the Aitolians. It hinges on the date to be assigned to the treaty with Akarnania (IG IX.1.3A), which records Polykritos as strategos for the second time. If, as I believe, this is best dated to 271/270, then Polykitos' first strategy must be some years before that; 277/276 is a guess, perhaps accurate to within two or three years.

*Oikiadas, etc. These are dated only vaguely in the 260s.

*Skopas (3)–3. It has been argued that Skopas was not in fact strategos in this year, in which he and Dorimachos (3) were commissioned to propose a solution to the debt problem. If this is so, then Lattamos was a full strategos, not a suffect.

*Dorimachos (3)–3. This strategy is recorded in fact as Dorimachos' fourth. It maybe that his service with Skopas on the debt commission counted as his third. There is no room for another strategy for him for twenty years before or after.

*T(e)isippos –2. The second strategy of this man, an associate of Lykiskos' in the massacre of 167, is not attested, and may not have taken place. But if anyone was to get a second term at this period, he would.

PART TWO

PROSOPOGRAPHY

INTRODUCTION

The following list contains the names of all the Aitolians who are recorded anywhere. Where possible the parentage and homeland have been included, together with the nature of the information about him, and the source of the information.

Certain procedures have been adopted, and there are some cautions which need to be pointed out:

1. Where known, parents have been given their own entry, with a date calculated on the basis that they were mature and active thirty years before the son or daughter. So if a 'child' is attested in 200 BC, the father's date will be put at 'c. 230'. The 'child's' date is included in brackets at the end of the entry.

2. I have attempted to identify the different records of individuals involved in various activities, and have brought these together into one entry. Four criteria are employed, and any three have been deemed sufficient to demonstrate identity. These are: identity of name, of parentage, of home—the usual Greek indications of individual identity—and an acceptable closeness of dating. This last has been operated on the basis that a man can have an active career of three decades. In the few cases where certainty is possible, this seems to be a fair average.

These criteria do not always work, needless to say, being arbitrary. Sometimes there are so many references to men with the same name that it is impossible to separate them out, and each has to be listed separately. Some men have longer careers than thirty years, some dates are either wrong or too vague, and it is likely that in some cases I have confused separate men into one. I hope that by providing the full references this may allow students to make their own decisions.

I have pushed speculation even father in my notes, which also contain warnings of especially difficult cases. I take it as read that one of the objects of a prosopography is to make such identifications if possible. This inevitably requires speculation.

3. Dating is always to be taken as no more than approximate or provisional. Because of this I have omitted 'circa' indications, except for parents' dates. Archon-dates indicated by the conventional '/' (as '183/182); dates linked by dashes (as '200–180') indicate extremes.

4. Entries are alphabetical by the English version of the names. I have rejected the recommendation by J. M. Fossey, The Study of Ancient Greek Prosopography, Chicago 1990 (or 1991), that entries should be numbered throughout. This seems to me to introduce yet another cause of confusion and another source of mistakes. It also distracts from the essential subject, which is the people in the list. Instead I have numbered entries with the same name by placing the distinguishing number in brackets after the name. I hope this might focus attention on the people, rather than the entry.

5. Incomplete names are indicated by [. . .]; this is not to be taken as the precise length of the gap.

6. In some cases there are alternative spellings of names in the Greek—Archedamos, Archidemos, Archidamos, for example. I have put all these together, with a signal at the alphabetically correct place.

Marginal Notes:

[F] indicates that this person is one of a family discussed in 'Aitolian Families' in the Studies.

Grammateus 185/4: IG IX.1.32.
Proxenos Sponsor for Rhodes and Corinth, 185/184: IG IX.1.32a

AGATHON (8) Chaleion
Died and was buried at Chaleion, C2: IG IX.1.3.732b.

AGATHOS (1) Amphissa
f of Proxenos (4), c.225: SGDI 2068 (of 194).

AGATHOS (2) Naupaktos
Slave manumitted at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.624e.

AGEAS (1) Amphissa
f of Theagenes, c.220: SGDI 2132 (of 188/187).

AGEAS (2) Kallia
Grammateus of Kallia, 210–200: IG IX.1.8.
Delphic Hieromnemon, 205/204: Fl I 38; Nachtergael 68; Lefevre 84–85.

AGEAS (3) Plygonos
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 196/195: SGDI 2050.

AGEDAMOS Phalika
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 143: SGDI 2136.

AGELAOS (1) [F]
Named in the Soteria list of 265: Syll (3) 424.
Delphic Hieromnemon, 248/247: Fl I 23; Lefevre 55. [3]

AGELAOS I (2) Naupaktos [F]
Strategos (1) 231/230: (unattested; assumed from second strategy).

[2] Assumed to be one man from the name, home city, and date, and their origin in the same manumission inscription.
[3] Assumed to be the same man from the name, date and Delphian connection; no origin nor parentages is known.

Strategos (2) 224/223: IG IX.1.4c.
Strategos (3) 217/216: Pol. 5.107.4.
Ally of Dorimachos and Skopas, 220: Pol. 4.16.10–11.
Commander in Elis, 218: Pol. 5.3.1.

AGELAOS (3) [4]
Epilektarchon on a monument to an Aitolian victory over the Akarnanians at Delphi c.230–200: IG IX.1.180; FdD III.4.178.

AGELAOS (4) Arsinoe
Hipparchos, 214/213: IG IX.1.31s.
Strategos, 205/204: Bousquet REG 101, 1988.
Proxenos Sponsor for an unknown city (n.d.): IG IX.1.31a.

AGELAOS (5) Daulia
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 193/192: SGDI 1969.

AGELAOS (6) [5]
Proprietor of Delphic building dispossessed in 191: Roussel, BCH 56, 1932.

AGELAOS (7), s of Agemachos (3) Kallipolis
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 174: SGDI 1987.

AGELAOS II (8), s of Kleonikos (3) Naupaktos [F]

Named in a manumission from Kalydon, 142/141: IG IX.1.137c.
f of Philon (16), c.170: IG IX.1.137c (of 142/141).

AGELAOS (11) Boukation
Named in a manumission at Phistyon (n.d.): IG IX.1.107.

AGELOCHOS (1) [F]
Delphic Hieromnemon, 241/240: Fl 1 28; Lefevre 60–62.

[4] This man was clearly important, but the absence of an origin prevents identification with Agelaos (2) or (4); one would suppose he was either one or the other.

[5] It seems possible that this man is identical with Agelaos (4), but proof is lacking; the possession of a building in Delphi before 191 argues wealth, as do the offices held by Agelaos (4).

[6] It is possible that these were the same; name, origin, and dating (just) imply it.

AGELOCHOS (2) [F]
Delphic Hieromnemon, 205/204: Fl I 37; Lefevre 94.

AGELOCHOS (3) Stratos [F]
f of Trichas (4), c.190: IG IX.1.100 (of 161/160).

AGELOCHOS (4), s of Trichas (3) Stratos [F]
Strategos, 169/168 or 168/167: IG IX.1.69.

AGELOCHOS (5) Arsinoe
Witness in a manumission at Phistyon, 163/162: IG IX.1.101.

AGELOCHOS (6) Philotaios
Named in a manumission at Phistyon, 143/142: IG IX.1.105.

AGELOCHOS (7) Isios
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.638–13.

AGEMACHA, d of Andromenes (2) Proscheion [F]
Named in a manumission from Kalydon, 198/192: IG IX.1.137a.

[9] It is not clear if the father is Apollonios, or the origin is Apollonia.
[10] These two are probably the same, but the difference in spelling and the long time-gap discourage full identification.
[11] An unlocated place-name.
[12] Identified as the same man on the basis of the unique name and the acceptable dating.

ALEXON (4) Opous
Mercenary in Macedonian service at a fort in Attika, after 235/234: IG II(2).1299; Launey 1132.

ALEXON (5) [21]
Delphic Hieromnemon, 228–222: Fl I 34; FdD III.4.364; Lefevre 68–71.

[20] Two Alexons are listed in Fl I 21; it is my assumption that the other references apply as shown; there may, of course, be other men of this name involved.
[21] The two men on Fl I 35 ensure that there were two Alexons in 221/220; Alexon (6) and (7) may well be identical with one of them and with each other.

ALEXON (6)
Delphic Hieromnemon, 221/220: Fl I 35; Lefevre 74–75. [21]

ALEXON (7)
Delphic Hieromnemon, 221/220: Fl I 35; Lefevre 74–75. [21]

AMEINOKRATES, s of Ameinokles (2) Bouttos
Archon at Bouttos, 151/150: IG IX.1.3.638–11.

[22] If these two men could be identified, an approximate date for IG IX.1.60 would be available; certainly the name is unique to Aitolia, but this is not enough. There are, however, other names which tend to suggest much the same dating.

Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 151/150: IG IX.1.3.638–11.
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 141/140: IG IX.1.3.638–4.

ANDROMENES (1), s of Kleonymos (1)
Honoured at Delphi, c.251: Fl II 16; FdD III.1.149.

[25] This is a substantial chronological gap, but it is within my standard limits, and the name and place are both unusual,

[26] Name and dating suggest this identification (there are no other Andromachoi in this century); though it must be regarded as tentative only.

ANDROMENES (2) Proscheion [F]
f of Agemacha, c.225: IG IX.1.137a (198–192).

ANDROMENES (3) Amphissa

ANDRONIKOS (13), s of Nikias (22) (Phistyon)
Named in a manumission from Phistyon (n.d.): IG IX.1.110. [30]

[28] This place name is restored as 'K[ytenion]' by several authorities (see FdD notes by Bousquet), but it is hardly justifiable.

[29] The absence of earlier records of a man prominent enough to be killed in this way is puzzling; identification with Andronikos (9) is possible, but more detail is needed for it to fit. Similarly the father could be the same man as Andronikos (3), (4), (5), or (8).

[30] These could be the same man.

ANDRONIKOS (14) Trichonos
Buried near Trichonos (n.d.): IG IX.1.124.

ANDROSTH[ENES] Tolphon
f of Archidamos (1), and Theodorokos, 250/249: SGDI 2580. [31]

ANDROSTHENIDAS, s of Krinias (2) Tolphon

ANTIDIKOS Aperantian
f of Antikrateia (n.d.): IG IX.1.165 (n.d.).

[31] In view of the next entry, the restoration must be viewed with skepticism.
[32] This is a very long time-spread, but I am persuaded to make the identification by the origin and the unique (in Aitolia) name; it is quite possible for a man to have an active public career of nearly half a century.

ANTIDOLAS Kallipolis
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 2119.

ANTIDOROS (1), s of Kriton (2) Naupaktos [F]

Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 141/140: IG IX.1.3.638–4.

ANTIOCHOS (6), s of An[. . .]os [34]
Strategos, c.137/136: SEG XII.300; IG IX.1.3.634a.

[33] If the restoration was certain, these two could be identified, but more evidence is clearly needed. The identification of the three items in Antileon (3) must be taken as tentative.

[34] This strategos is very likely to be identified with Antiochos (3), (4), (5), or (7); the favourite would be Antiochos (4) since a man who became league strategos is likely to have been active in other areas of public authority as well.

ANTIOCHOS (7) Phyllaion
Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.639–2.

ANTIOCHOS (8)

Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 1995.

[45] Date uncertain, but very likely; the stone is fragmentary; it is, however, not altogether certain that this man is an Aitolian.

[46] These two are apparently identified by Flacelière in his index, but the time difference seems too great.

[47] It is unlikely that two men with the same name from the same small town were prominent at the same period, so I have identified these as one man.

Named in a manumission at Delphi, 193/192: SGDI 1984.
Proprietor of Delphic buildings dispossessed in 191: Roussel, BCH 56, 1932.

Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 137/136: IG IX.1.3.635b.

[53] Panaitolos is in fact known and active in 217; Ariston must have been alive and adult by the 240s.
[54] This identification results from an identity of name and place, and approximate time; cf Klaffenbach in IG IX.1.624f.

ARISTON (28) Naupaktos
f of Ariston (29) (n.d.): Launey 1135.

ARISTON (29), s of Ariston (28) Naupaktos
Mercenary soldier in Ptolemaic service at Redesiyah (n.d.): Launey 1135.

Died and was buried at Physkeis, C3: IG IX.1.3.695c.

ARISTOPHILOS Phyllaion
f of Satyros (8), c.180: IG IX.1.3.633 (of 150/149).

[55] The vague dating makes these identifications tentative, but everything seems to fit otherwise.

ARISTOPHYLOS (1) Physkeis
Proprietor of Delphic building dispossessed in 191: Roussel, BCH 56, 1932; Michaud.

ARISTOPHYLOS (2), s of Ladikos (5) Kallipolis [F]

ARKION, s of Lysi[. . .]kousios (Kalydon)
Named in a manumission from Kalydon, 129/128: IG IX.1.137f.

ARKIPPOS—see ARCHIPPOS.

ARKISA (1) Dexios
Slave manumitted at Delphi, 165: SGDI 1818.

ARKISA (2), d of Arkison (6) (Phistyon)
Named in a manumission from Phistyon (n.d.): IG IX.1.110.

ARKISIOS (1) Naupaktos
f of Sp(h)airos (2), c.180: SGDI 1816 (of c.150). [56]

ARKISIOS (2) Phyllaion [56]
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.639–2.

[56] Since Phyllaion is probably within the city boundary of Naupaktos, these are probably the same man, though the rather wide chronological separation prevents certainty.

ARKISON I (1) [F]
Strategos (1), 264/263: IG IX.1.172.
Strategos (2), 256/255: IG IX.1.173.

ARRIPHON Trichonos [57]
Poetaster, friend of Pausanias, C2 AD: Paus. 2.37.3.

ARTEMIDOROS (1) [58]
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col III.

ARTEMIDOROS (2)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col IV.

ARTEMIDOROS (3)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col III.

[57] The only Aitolian known of from the Roman Imperial period.
[58] It seems probable that Artemidoros (1) to (4) are actually one man.

ARTEMIDOROS (4)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col IV.

ARTEMIS, wife of Mnasilaos (4) Amphissa

Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 163: SGDI 1734.

ASIAS, s of Aristarchos (1) Throneion
Named on an inscription from Delphi, 262/261: CID II 120.

[59] The name is corrupt in the text, which reads 'Timasor'.
[60] Artemon (2) to (4) could be identical; it is also possible if the dating is c.170 (note 22), that these are the same man as (1).

ASIDAMOS Amphissa
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 174/173: SGDI 1852.
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 173: SGDI 1856.

ASKLEPIADES (10)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col V.

ASKLEPIADES (11)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col V.

---

[61] Asklepiades (5) to (7) could be the same man, for Bouttos lay within Naupaktos' chora, but the dating is too vague.
[62] Asklepiades (8) to (12) could be identical.

ASKLEPIADES (12)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col VI.

ASKLEPIADES—see ASKLAPIADAS.

AUTOKLES, s of Damainetos Amphissa [F]
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 181: SGDI 2047.

[63] Possibly only one man; it seems very unlikely that two men with this name should both appear on the same inscription, yet the name never be recorded elsewhere.

AUTOLYKOS, s of Aston Herakleia
Komoidos at the Soteria of 259/258 and 255/254: SGDI 2564; Nachtergael 8.
Komoidos at the Soteria of 258/257 and 254/253: SGDI 2565; Nachtergael 9.

AXIOCHOS Hypata
Delphic Hieromnemon 221/220: Fl I 35; Lefevre 74–75.
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 198/197: SGDI 2073. [64]

[64] These two are within the chronological distance, are both associated with Delphi, and have a unique name.

Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.624g.

[65] Bakchios (1) to (3) are all possibly the same man.
[66] Presumably this is an idiosyncratic spelling of 'Balchios', omitting the chi.

Named in a manumission (at Naupaktos?), mid C2: IG IX.1.3.643–I. f of Lanassa, early C2: IG IX.1.3.624g (of mid C2).

DAMAGON Amphissa
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 192/191: SGDI 2129.

---

[73] The unusual name and the near contemporaneity of the two records suggest this identification; the main problem is the varied places involved—Kalydon (for Damokritos), Naupaktos, and Kaphreis. But these are manumission inscriptions and witnesses appear from a variety of origins in such acts. The name and time considerations must override place evidence in this case.

[74] Possibly the same man.

DAMAINETOS (1), s of Eudikos (1) Amphissa [F, 75]
Honoured with a statue at Delphi: IG IX.1.776.
f of Eudikos (6) and Oxymachos: IG IX.1.776 and 704 (of c.200).

DAMARCHOS (8), s of [. . .]onos (2) Kalydon
Honoured by a statue, erected by the city of Kalydon (n.d.): IG IX.1.140.

[75] There are clearly two Damainetoi in Amphissa in the last decades of the third century; Damainetos (1), and his son Eudikos (2) were both honoured with statues, one at Delphi, the other at Physkeis. Another Damainetos (4) is also from Amphissa, but he appears not to be related to the others—though this is perhaps, given the name, unlikely.

[76] It is quite probable that Damainetos (2) and (7) were the same, but the indefinite dating of the grave stele prevents identification.

DAMARET[. . .] Physkeis
Died and was buried at Physkeis, C2: IG IX.1.3.696.

[78] It is tempting to identify these two, but the gap in time is too great.
[79] The Eitaioi were a tribe, or a sub-set, of the Eurytanes; a boundary stone between them and the Eoitanoi was recorded by Woodhouse, JHS 13, 1893, 350, no 21, near Agrinion.
[80] These three could well be the same, but the name is not uncommon, the dates tend to be vague, and, though Bouttos was in Naupaktos' territory, it was a separate community; it seems best to list the three separately.

DEMOKRATES (7) Bouttos
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 137/136: IG IX.1.3.635b.

DAMOKRATOS Herakleia

Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 137/136: IG IX.1.3.638–1.

---

[82] These two are identified based on their names, dates, and homes. However, the dates of the father of Sosipatros and the place of the son of Damomenos are both estimated; the identification can only be considered probable.

DAMOPHANES (1) Amphissa
f of Philokrates (2), c.230: SGDI 2116 (of 200/199). [F, 83]

DAMOPHANES (2), s of Gennaios (1) Amphissa

DAMOTIMOS (8)
Strategos, c.138: IG IX.1.2.635a. [86]

[84] These two are named separately on the inscription.
[85] This man could be identified with either Damotimos (1) or (2).
[86] The date here is uncertain; it could be that this is the same man as Damotimos (6), strategos over twenty years before, but no provenance for this man is known, and Damotimos (6) is already identified as active since the 180s.

DAMOXENOS (1), s of Paidias (1) Herakleia [F] f of Kallisto, c.170: IG IX.1.3.624d (of 141/140).

88 A relationship, or at least a common origin (Thracian?) seems probable here.
89 The time gap here is formidable, but the three names involved are convincing.

DEMARITOS Dastiadai
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 137/136: IG IX.1.3.634a.

DEMETRIA Physkeis
Slave (of Pergamene origin) manumitted at Delphi, 194: SGDI 2119.

DINARCHOS
Hipparchos, 169: Livy 43.22.4. [94]

DINIAS, s of Eudamos (3) Stratos
Proxenos Sponsor for Maketios, 160s: IG IX.1.36.

[93] Possibly identical with Dikaiarchos (8).

[94] This is the latinised version of the name, since it is from Livy; the only other man of that name, spelled the Greek way (Deinarchos) is known from the column-inscription at Thermos (IG IX.1.60), which may be about the right date (see note 22).

DIO[. . .] Helaios
Theodorokos, 250/249: SGDI 2580.

DIODOROS, s of Philagros Plygonos
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 196: SGDI 2044.

DIOKLES (5) [96]
Commanded the Aitolian seizure of Demetrias, 192: Livy 35.34.5.

[95] Diogenes (1) to (5) could well be the same man.
[96] These three, all prominent within the same generation, could be the same man, but more evidence is needed.

DIOKLES (6) Boukation
Witness in a manumission at Phistyon, 164/163: IG IX.1.99.

DIOKLES (7) Naupaktos
Grammateus at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.620 and 621.

DION (8), s of Euarchos (3) Amphissa [F]
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 189: SGDI 2024.

[97] These four notices are considered one man by the repeated connection with Delphi, but the identification is only tentative.
[98] These two, named on the same inscription, could be the same man; but they are identified separately, so it is best to list them in that way.
[99] Identified by name and place and close dating.

DION (9), s of Polemarchos (19) Naupaktos [100]
Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, 163/162: IG IX.1.3.631.
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 150/149: IG IX.1.3.633.

Slave manumitted at Delphi, 186: SGDI 2239.

DIONYSIOS (8), s of Ladikos (3) (Poteidania)
Named on a manumission at Poteidania, c.150: SEG XLI.28.

DIONYSIOS (9), s of Eusthenes Naupaktos [101]

[100] Date, place, and name suggest this to be the same man.
[101] Only one of these instances (624c) gives the patronymic, but the dating and the place, and the repeated appearance in manumissions at the same timely, strongly implies identity.

Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.624c.
Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.623.
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.624e.
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.628b.

Named in a manumission at Delphi, 188/187: SGDI 2132.

DOROTHEOS (4), s of Dorkinas (2) Dymaia
Attested in 196/195: IG IX.1.30a.

DOROTHEOS (5) Plygonos
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 2120.

DOROTHEOS (6) Kallipolis
Proprietor of Delphian building dispossessed in 191: Roussel, BCH 56, 1932.

DOROTHEOS (7) Amphissa
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 191: SGDI 2131. [102]

[102] This man could be identical with Dorotheos (2), (3), or (8), though since they are all carefully distinguished by patronymic, it is best to consider him as a separate person.

DOROTHEOS (8), s of Archelaos (2) Amphissa
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 186: SGDI 1844.
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 185: SGDI 1953.

DRAKON (3) Polis [F]
Hipparchos, c.210–200: IG IX.1.8.
f of [. . .]tas, c.215: IG IX.1.187 (of 187/196).

DRAKON (4) Kallipolis
Proprietor of Delphian land at Hypopleistiai dispossessed in 191: Roussel, BCH 56, 1932.

[103] It is quite possible that these two are the same man, with (2) being the returned, wealthy, ex-mercenary (1).
[104] Other references to Skorpion suggest this date for the father.
[105] This fragmentary name has been restored as [Er]e[sos] and as [Amph]o[te]ros. It seems safer to leave it unrestored.

DROPAKOS (1)
Delphic Hieromnemon, 261/260: Fl I 17; FdD III.3.190; Lefevre 41.

DROPAKOS (2), s of Neoptolemos (6) Lamia
Proxenos sponsor for Matropolis (n.d.): SGDI 1439.

DROPINAS (1) Kallipolis [F]
f of Ladikos (1), c.235: FdD III 4.240 (of 205/204) and IG IX.1.3.783 (of C2).

DYSOPOS Apollonia
Arbitrator in the dispute between Melitaia and Pieria, c.213: IG IX.1.186.

[106] It seems likely that Dropinas (2) and (3) are the same (see also Families).
[107] Or perhaps Dryon.

E

ECHEDAMOS (1) Teithronion [F]
f of Niko, c.225: SGDI 1983 (of 194).

ECHEDAMOS (2) Kytenion

ELPINAS Proscheion
Named in a manumission at Phistyon, 163/162: IG IX.1.101.

[108] The repetition of several names on IG IX.1.99, 101 and 104 strongly suggest the identification of these cases as one man, though neither 104 nor the dedication which is 111 are precisely dated.

ELPINIKOS Lokris
f of [. . .]itas, c.240: FdD III.4.224 (of 208).

EMAUTOS Kalydon
f of Philoxenos (10), c.160: IG IX.1.137f (of 129/128).

[109] The name on the stone is Kyanthios, the emendation is Daux'.

[110] It is tempting to identify Euarchos (1) and (2): the name and dates fit, and (1)'s father's name is echoed by (2)'s son's name—but certainty is too elusive; Euarchos (3) might fit in too.

[111] The date is derived from the date of Eudikos (2)'s statue, counting back two generations—not therefore all that reliable.

EUARCHOS (8), s of Euarchos (4) Amphissa [F]

EUNOOS Kalydon
Witness in an agreement between Oitia and Phokis, c.170: IG II.1.(1).229.

[114] Identifying (1), (2) and (4) as a family is hazardous, but name and date persuade me, against the rules, because of the father's Soteria connection, and the names of the sons.

EUNOSTOS Naupaktos

EUPOLEMOS (4) Plygonos
f of Leaina (2), c.230: SGDI 2048 (of 198).

[115] It is a rather arbitrary decision to identify these instances as all of one man. There are clearly two men of this name active at the same time, one a Dolopian and one from Kallipolis. I suggest the Kallipolitan was the one also involved in the Soteria and as hieromnemon, but these references could also, or separately, apply to the Dolopian.

[116] This should be an origin, from the form of the inscription, or it may be a patronymic; in the former case, it is otherwise unknown; the inscription is too fragmentary for better dating.

[117] Perhaps not technically an Aitolian, since Demetrias was probably only an ally of the league for the brief time Eurylochos was in power in 192–191, but it seems worth including him.

[118] The unique name (to Aitolia), and the common origin in a relatively small city, suggest this identification, and overcome the lack of date for SGDI 1457A.

EUSTHENES Naupaktos [119]
Grammateus at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.638–10.
f of Aristarchos (7) and Dionysios (9), c.180: IG IX.1.3.627a (of 152/151) and 624c (of mid C2).

HIPPIAS (2) Naupaktos
Proxenos Sponsor for Mitylene, 239/238: IG IX.1.25a.

[127] Possibly the same man; it would be very odd if the only two men of this name who are recorded in Aitolia just happened to appear at the same place at the same time doing the same thing.

HIPPIAS (3) My[stakos] [128]
Proxenos Sponsor for Athens, mid C2; IG IX.1.24a.

KRATON Amphissa
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 181: SGDI 2134.

---

[136] The decisive elements in identifying these various instances are the unusual name, and the small home-city; it is improbable that two men of the same name from the same place were as active as this at the same period. It may be that Kratinos (2) is also the same man—Tritaia was in Lokris.

[137] Possibly the same man.

KRINIAS (1), s of Aristoma[chos] (2) Oiantheia [F]
Theodorokos, 250/249: SGDI 2580.

LAMIOS (16), s of Lydikos (2) Naupaktos
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 163: SGDI 1737. [144]

[142] These three could be the same man, but the name is all too common.

[143] These five give pause for thought, and a warning against too free association; they are all from the same small place and all with the same name, and their active careers more or less overlap—they were certainly alive at the same time. Clearly the name 'Lamios' was a popular choice in Bouttos. Yet the care with which they are distinguished by their patronymics is encouraging since it shows that contemporaries—and the men themselves—were concerned that they should be clearly separated in the records.

[144] This man may well be the same as Lamios (10); name, place and dates certainly fit.

LAMIOS (17) Phistyon
Witness in a manumission at Phistyon, 163/162: IG IX.1.103.

LAMIOS (18) Daianos

LAMPRION (1)
Amphikyonic scribe, 263/262: Syll (3) 488; Fl I 14; Lefevre 35.

---

[145] It is difficult to believe that two different men called Lamprias, both sons of men called Pankles, existed at the same time, and I assume there was only one. The envoy to Xanthos went on behalf of the city of Kytenion, but he was not necessarily from that city. The answer may well be in the connection between Kytenion and Xanthos, which was their joint original foundation by Herakles, whose temple on Mount Oita was close to Homilidas, a deme of Oitia.

LAMPRION (2) Alpa
f of Alexandros (22), c.200: IG IX.1.3.708 (of 168).

LAMPRON Stratos
f of Dikko, C3: IG IX.1.2.406.

LEAINA (1), d of Lykos (33)
Honoured by a monument at Delphi (n.d.): Syll (3) 514; FdD III.3.149.

[146] A rather long time-gap between these two items, but the unique name and the Delphian connection is convincing.

[147] The unique name at the time, and the acceptable time-distance, suggest this identification.

LEAINA (2), d of Eupolemos (4) Plygonos
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 198: SGDI 2048.

LEBANOS
Slave (of Arab origin) manumitted at Naupaktos after 141/140: IG IX.1.3.624d.

LEON (10) Isios
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 195: SGDI 2011.

[148] Listing these as one man is an arbitrary decision: there may be more than one involved; but the close dating is very suggestive.
[149] The place name is restored as [Make]tios by Flacelière, and as [Thes]tia in FdD; decision is not possible.

Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 195: SGDI 1993.
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 185: SGDI 1949.

LEONTIOS (4) Dymaia
f of Theokritos, c.160: Daux, Delphes, 651–2 (of 128/127).

[151] This identification of these notices as referring to one man is only likely, but seems worth making; all the sons were from Naupaktos, as was the grammateus.

LEONTIOS (5) Akotia
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, 137/136: IG IX.1.3.634a.

LEONTOMENOS (1)
Delphic Hieromnemon, 261/260: Fl I 17; FdD III.3.190; Lefevre 41.

Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.638–5.

[152] Identifying these three as one man is a fairly arbitrary decision, but Leontomenes (3) and (6) were certainly distinct from (3).

[153] These three seem certainly to be identical, and Leontomenos (6) is another possibility.

LEONTOMENES (10) (Naupaktos) [154]
Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.623.

LEONTOMENES (11) (Naupaktos) [154]

LOCHAGOS (2), s of N[. . .] (1) Melitaia
Witness in the arbitration between Meliteia and Xyniai, 214/213: IG IX.1.177.

[154] Probably identical with each other, but detail is lacking.
[155] In all likelihood, these are one person.

LOCHAGOS (3) Phy[r]taios [156]
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 185: SGDI 1949.

LOCHAGOS (4), s of Hagetas (1) Kallipolis [F]

[156] The only other instance of this name is as a patronymic (Leontios (1)). Its occurrence here is a problem. It seems to be a place-name, in which case it is the only known example. It may therefore be a mistake for the the name 'Phytaios' known elsewhere, or it may be a patronymic: hence the square brackets.

[157] The seals in SEG XXXVII.427 were found in a house at Kallipolis. The grammateis named on them are best seen as officials of the city rather than the league, for few of the known league grammateis came from Kallipolis, and few or none of the seal-names fit with known league grammateis. None of this is more than tentative, but in this case the grammateus Lochagos (5) may well be the same as the strategos Lochagos (4); indeed the house has been supposed to have been his. All non-proven, of course.

LYK[. . .]
Mercenary soldier recorded at Chios or Erythrai (n.d.): Launey 1136.

LYKA[. . .] Thermos

Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.624b.

---

[158] This identification is at the extreme chronological range, only just acceptable; an alternative would be to link the hieromnemon of 221/220 with the boularchos (Lykeas (3)), but the latter's date is especially uncertain.

LYKIDAS (6) Phistyon
f of Dikeopolis (3) (n.d.): IG IX.1.113 (n.d.).

MEGARISTAS Phistyon
Named in a manumission at Phistyon, 204–190: IG IX.1.98.

[168] The inscription on which this appears has not been fully published; a guess would suggest that the full name would be Ma[chata]s, that is, Machatas (3), the distinguished envoy.

[169] These are likely to be one man only.

[170] The name, place of origin, and the acceptable dating persuade me to identify these four instances as one man.

MENEKRATES (5) [174]
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col VII.

[173] The date here is difficult; Robert restores the strategos' name as 'Arkison' (only Ar[...] remains), which leads him to suggest 264/263 as the date. I identify the three instances partly due to the dating, but also I make the assumption that a man eminent enough to be chosen as envoy to Ptolemy is likely to be of strategos rank or stature; certainly he would need to be wealthy to have either office.

[174] These could be the same man.

MENEKRATOS [174]
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col V.

MENELAOS (1) Stratos

MENEOS Naupaktos
f of Androbolos (1), c.315: Syll (3) 380 (of 286-281).

[175] The place name is actually inscribed as 'Pampheia', pronunciation is no doubt to blame.
[176] Menemachos (5) to (8) may well be a single person.

MENEPHYLOS Lamia
Hipparchos at Lamia (n.d.): SGDI 1441.

MENESANDROS
Delphic Hieromnemon, 228–223: Fl I 34; FdD III.4.364; Lefevre 68–71.

MENIPPOS (2) Akraios
Witness in an agreement between Oitia and Phokis, c.170: IG IX.1 (1).228.

[177] This man is unknown except for these statements. The others accused with him were very eminent men—Thoas, Damokritos—and one would expect him to have held high office to have gained such influence. Possible he was the strategos of 209/208 whose name is only preserved as Ma[. . .]s; see also note 167.

MENIPPOS (3) [178]

MENO Plygonos
Wife of Echekles and named in a manumission at Delphi, 196/195: SGDI 2050.

MENODOROS (1) [179]
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col VI.

MENODOROS (2)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col II.

MENODOROS (3)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col VI.

---

178 Menippos (3) to (5) could well be one man, and if IG IX.1.60 is dated about 170, they could be the same as (2).

179 Menodoros (1) to (4) may be one man.

MENODOROS (4)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col VI.

MENOGENES (1) [180]

Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col V.

MENOPHILOS (1) [183]
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col V.

MENOPHILOS (2)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col II.

---

[180] Possibly the same man.
[181] The unique name in these notices suggests a single person, and the dates are close, despite the uncertainty over IG IX.1.136.
[182] If IG IX.1.50 is really dated c.170, Menon (4) could be the same man as (2), or possibly (3).
[183] Menophilos (1) to (3) could be one man.

MENOPHILOS (3)
Named in a list inscribed on a column at the temple at Thermos, probably a list of benefactors (n.d.): IG IX.1.60, col VII.

MENTOR, s of Damosthenes (1) Naupaktos

[186] The vagueness of the dating, and the 'late C2' suggestion make it necessary to separate these two, but the coincidence of name, place, and action suggests identity or relationship.

[187] Name, dating and, place suggest the identification here.

[188] The unique name (for Aitolia, at least), the acceptable dating, and the Delphian connection are the bases for this identification.

m of Menedamos (3) and Eupados, and named in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 1983.

[193] Both dates are vague, but names and origins strongly suggest this to be one man, as does the extreme rarity of Aitolian inscriptions as late as this.

[194] Perhaps the same man, but the evidence is too vague to pronounce with certainty.

NIKO[. . .], s of Leontomenes (3) (Naupaktos)
Named in a manumission at Naupaktos, 200–180: IG IX.1.3.625a.

NIKOBOULOS (10) [198]
f of Stration (n.d.): IG II(2) 7987 (n.d.).

[195] The name and origin would perhaps be sufficient to identify these, the dating is just enough to help out.

[196] Name, close timing, and origin identify these as one man.

[197] The dating of Nikoboulos as father is at some variance with his activity on the manumissions, but he appears on the same inscription as his sons (IG IX.1.137f), and, with name and origin this seems good enough.

[198] The same names and relationship existed between Nikoboulos (6) and Straton II (6); one might posit a relationship between the two pairs as well.

NIKODAMOS (1) Amphissa
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 197: SGDI 2001.
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 2122.

NIKOLAOS (4), s of Euboulos (1) Kallipolis
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 174: SGDI 1843.

[199] This man, clearly important in 189, is not attested elsewhere; he could be the same man as Nikodamos (1)—but Amphissans are conspicuously absent from league affairs—or (3).

[200] Name and dating are the main elements here, though the names on the Delphian inscription are incomplete; this grouping must be regarded as only tentative; yet the alternative is to have three men of the same name at the same time doing the much the same things.

NIKOLAOS (5) Potidaneia
Grammateus named on a decree (n.d.): IG IX.1.9.

NIKOLAOS (6) [201]

Delphic Hieromnemon, 263/262: Fl I 14; Lefevre 35.

---

[203] The sons are contemporaries, and it seems reasonable to assume their fathers were one man.
[204] The father of Nikaios' name is spelled Neikon, but the dating, the origin, and the names are convincing as to the identity of the two.
[205] The absence of a patronymic suggests that this man is different from his contemporary Nikon (10).

NIKOPHRON Thestia
Witness in a manumission at Phistyon, 141/140: IG IX.1.96.

NIKOPOLIS Dryopaios
Proxenos Sponsor for Eretria, 239/238: IG IX.1.25a.

ORTHAIOS (2) Amphissa
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 197: SGDI 2001.

---

[209] The name and dating seem to be sufficient here, when the Delphian connection is added.

ORTHAIOS (3) Oinaion
Witness in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 1988.

ORTHEAS (1), s of Damon (2) Lokris
Honoured at Delphi, 250–248: Fl II 48; FdD II.186.

In service of Antiochos III in the east, 209: Pol. 10.49.11–12.
Strategos 167/166: SGDI 1729, 1783, 1854.
f of Philodamos (5): SEG XXIV 616.
Witness in a manumission at Naupaktos, mid C2: IG IX.1.3.624e.

[210] The putative date for the father of Damoxenos is too vague to allow of further identification.

[211] This identity is suggested by Klaffenbach in IG IX.1.3; the unique name, common home, and acceptable dating confirms it.

[212] It seems unlikely that two men of this name were prominent in Aitolia at the same time. It is a long stretch, however, to have the strategos in 167/166 be the same man as the commander in Syria fifty years earlier. Yet it was a very difficult time in Aitolia, just after the massacre, and a man such as an aged but eminent ex-mercenary commander would be an ideal figurehead. The witness in the manumission is not given an origin, and so his appearance in the role at Naupaktos is not a bar to this identification. Nevertheless the whole must be seen as tentative.

PANDOKOS
Named in a proxeny decree, 257/256: IG IX.1.20a.

PANKLES, s of Korymbios Homiliadas [F, 213]
Choroi andron at the Soteria of 263/262 or 258/257: SGDI 2566; Nachtergael 5.

Delphic epimeletes, 205/204: Fl II 90; Roussel, BCH 1926.

PANTALEON (4) Plygonos
Owner of Delphian land dispossessed in 191: Michaud.

PANTALEON II (5), s of Archedamos (2) Pleuron [F, 214]
Envoy to Glabrio, 191: Pol. 20.9.2.
Strategos (1), 186/185: SGDI 1844, 1949.
Strategos (2), 180/179 (assumed from third strategy).
Strategos (3), 174/173: SGDI 1856.

[213] See Lamprias for the identification of this man; the son of Korymbios is added by reason of the unique name, and the dating, which is just acceptable; but it must be seen as tentative.
[214] The Archedamoi show varying spelling, but are clearly the same man.

Saves Eumenes II from assassins, 172: Livy 42.15.8–10.

PH[. . .] Thermos
Theodorokos, 250/249: SGDI 2580.

---

[218] Here is one of the drawbacks in estimating a father's floruit by subtracting thirty years from a son's; Pantaleon was strategos by 242/241, yet the name of his father is only recorded from 217–212; clearly the father's date should be put further back than 245.

PHILOKRATES (3) Myania
Slave manumitted at Delphi, 179: SGDI 2065.

---

[223] The date of this Philodamos is difficult; his son and his grandson were both employed in Cyprus in the reign of Ptolemy VI (145–116); one might suppose Philodamos' floruit was thus somewhat earlier than 'mid C2'. It is probable that he is the same man as the son of Panaitolos: the dates are probably close, and the occupations of the Melankomai and Panaitolos were as mercenary soldiers.

PHILOKRATES (4), s of Theophrastos (1) Myania
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 1988.

[240] Identification of these three as one man is precarious, depending on the name, of which it is the only contemporary example, and the dating; relationships and origins are only attested once. Nevertheless the man honoured at Delphi was clearly a prominent person and is likely to have had other achievements to his name.

SOSIPOLIS
Slave manumitted at Kalydon, 142/141: IG IX.1.137a.

---

[243] The identity of place and name, and the unusual name (only one other example known in Aitolia) suggests this link, though a firm date for IG IX.1.3.612 would help.

[244] Name, home, and close dating suggests this identification.

SOSIPPOS (1)
Sculptor of a monument to Ptolemy IV at Delphi, C3: FdD III.1.234; IG IX.1.202.

SP(H)AIROS (1) Phistyon [248]
Slave manumitted at Phistyon, 163/162: IG IX.1.103.

[246] These two may be the same man, but there are too many uncertainties in the details to be sure.

[247] These three notices are identified as one man on the basis of name and origin; the dating is within the acceptable limits; the manumission and the confiscation at Delphi could well have occurred late in the man's life.

[248] These are spelled 'Sp...' on the stones, and are generally emended to read 'Sph...'

SP(H)AIROS (2), s of Arkisios Naupaktos [248] identical, but the indefinite date for Straton (8) derived from an indefinite date for his son, precludes certainty.

[252] Straton (10) to (12) could well be one man.

[253] It seems likely that these two notices are of one person, but they are not coincident enough for certainty.

[258] Theagenes appears on the same inscription as his son, thus undermining his dating; all the same it seems best to have just one Theagenes.

[259] The long time span implies two men, but that of the father is an artificial date; I have therefore joined these items into one; the unusual name, the home city, and the similar actions must outweigh the extrapolated date.

[260] Name (though spelled slightly differently), home, dating, and positions imply a single person here; Syll (3) 492 has 'Theudoros'.

THEODOROS (7) Poteidania
f of Menestratos (2), c.180: IG IX.1.3.632 (of 153/152).

Mercenary (pentekosioarchos) in Ptolemaic service at Tholthis, Oxyrhynchite nome, 215/214: Launey 1134.

[261] Aperantia is a huge area, and Theodotos not an uncommon name. It is surely something of a coincidence that two men of the same from the area are both recorded in inscriptions; but, no matter how tempting, it is not possible to identify them.

TIMARCHOS (3), s of Pheidolaos (1) Boaios
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 197: SGDI 2074.

[265] This time gap is rather large, but within the limits I have used, while name and place (and even office) are the same.
[266] No other instance is known of a place in Aitolia called Ptolemaios, and the temptation is to assume it is really a patronymic; however, every other Aitolian in the inscription is identified by his home, so it must be assumed that Timarchos is no different.

TIMARCHOS (4), s of Euboulidas (4) Poteidania [F]
Witness in a manumission at Poteidania, c.150: SEG XLI 528A.

TIMARETAS, d of Timolaos (1) Apollonia [F]

TIMON (5), s of Phillidas (1) Amphissa
Named in a manumission at Delphi, 194: SGDI 2123.

[268] The appearance of these on the same honorific inscription suggests—with the names and origins (a small place)—that they will be the same man.

[269] The hipparchos of the Tenos decree was clearly a substantial figure in Aitolia; so was Timolochos of Poteidania; identifying them seems reasonable.

TIMON (6) Phalika [F]
f of Antiphanes (13), c.175: SGDI 2136 (of 143).

TIMON (7), s of Timotheos (4) Stratos
